But there is a time when each of us has wondered if there is any way we can see who has visited our profile. So, Facebook Profile View Notification was created - a Google Chrome Extension that no longer exists but is replaced with Social Profile Visa Notification. Who is checking up on your Facebook profile? While it's true that Facebook collects a massive amount of data about its users, including who has visited our profile, they don't share that data with anyone. Facebook cares about its users' privacy, so they consider this information to be strictly confidential. In fact, it says that we should report any third-party application that claims that it can provide us with this kind of information. This means that such apps exist, but their accuracy is not proven. Not surprisingly, many of them give you false information with no value. These apps or companies ask you to give them permission to access your profile and private information. Not only can they access your private information, but they can also infect your device with malware or distribute spam. Facebook believes that our information is confidential, so many of the apps that claim they can show your Facebook viewers are actually scams. Instead, they will have access to your social media profile accounts until you manually revoke it. What about the Social Profile View Notification? The Social Profile view or Facebook Profile Viewer view message is a Google Chrome extension that claims to send messages when someone visits your profile. According to users, however, the add-on only warns you if the person who has viewed your profile is a user of the add-on as well. How to install and use this extensionFind the Social Profile View Notification extension on the Chrome Web Store and install the plug-in. Then, log into your Facebook profile account, and you'll see a new menu on your Facebook page called Visitors. When you hit it, a popup with a list of your Facebook visitors will appear, along with the dates of their visit. So, when someone looks at your profile, you'll see a notification revealing their name and time of visit, as long as they're users of the extension as well. It sounds too simple to be true because it only requires the Chrome browser and install the plugin, but that's what this extension claims. Mind you, it has nothing to do with Facebook, as Facebook cares about its users' privacy. Conclusion Wondering if you can really see who has visited your Facebook profile? Although Facebook doesn't display this information because it regards it as confidential data, there are third-party applications that claim they can show you your Facebook visitors. One of them is Google Chrome kallas Social Profile view view Although its accuracy is not proven, it is up to you to decide whether to use it and believe the data it provides.
