Blue howlite metaphysical properties

Howlite is a beautiful white stone that represents the spiritual qualities of stillness, tenderness and open-mindedness. It is named after Henry How, the scientist who brought this crystal to academic consciousness in 1868 after finding crystal deposits in Nova Scotia. However, the stone has also received other names, more recently Snow Leopard Stone, for its resemblance to the skin of the beautiful big cat of Central and South Asia, and probably because these beautiful creatures also make a surprising howl. By using this stone to help meditation and a spiritual ally, you can feel transported to snow-filled mountain ranges, where spirit and nature are joined in a white blanket. As with all sacred white gemstones, Howlite can bring peace and clarity of mind - its black lines, however, means that the mind is still at work, centered, not off. Its relationship to snow makes it a crystal of the winter months when mammalian bodies go into total or partial hibernation. This process is spiritually integral, provides the soul and spirit with the energy they need to continue their important transformative works. Let Howlite guide you through the process of physically slowing down while maintaining a complete spiritual and mental consciousness. It is in these times that your inner snow leopard can complete the hunts you need, not from prey, but negative habits, thought patterns and energies. Check out our books on crystals and astrology: Howlite is a crystal of compassion, too. Its texture is smooth and reminds us that in all the things we do, do it sweetly. This includes the actions we take with others, but more importantly, the actions we take with ourselves. As you're experiencing your spiritual transformation, no matter what stage of your process you are in, Howlite provides the example of the snow leopard with its strength and focus, but also the soft, white fur it carries with it wherever it goes. Similarly, each of us can bring the softness of the spirit by making transformations in our lives, remembering to treat us gently because significant changes take time and do not occur overnight. Finally, Howlite contains the spiritual quality of open-mindedness. This works perfectly with compassion, as the open mind allows all ideas and thoughts to come together within us without judgment. As you encounter new challenges, arguments, ideas, persuasions, you can check out your Howlite crystal, which gently asks you to investigate each of them with soft, loving legs. Not all ideas and coming to us are beneficial, but if we approach them without an open mind, we produce the poison of judgment within ourselves, which can only bring more pain and discomfort.
