Jasper is an opaque, solid or stamped variety of cryptocrystalline quartz consisting of very small quartz crystals colored by various mineral impurities. The names of various jaspers may come from their color: blood stone, green, lemon; from his pattern: orbicular, poppy, leopard skin, landscape, Picasso; or a place name: Morrisonite, Mookite. All types have excellent polishing, are problems free to care for, and resilient enough for all uses of jewelry. These stones are usually sneaked, sometimes cut, and rarely faceted. The use of jasper jewelry goes back to the early history of civilization. Various forms of this material are also frequently converted into decorative objects, such as ashtrays or bookends. Jaspers are found all over the world, with certain colors or patterns unique to certain locals. Most of the blood stone comes from India, all mookaites in Australia. Image stones Some of the most precious gems are those that show an image that appears to be taken from nature. Oregon's Biggs Jasper is now the most common source. Bruneau Jasper, from Bruneau Canyon, Idaho, used to be the preferred material. Gems in this locality often had blue skies that Oregon material lacks. Unfortunately, a dam has submerged the mining site and the material is now quite rare. The value Jaspers, in are very common; hence most of the value of a given piece is related to the saturation of its color, the beauty of its pattern or the art with which it is fashionable. Some types like imperial imperial imperial and Madagascar Jasper command premium prices as they are relatively rare. In rock stores, commercial quality pieces cut into simple shapes could be had for $5 or less. Fine material, cut into designer shapes, usually ranges from $2 to $5 per carat. Agate prices are generally quite modest - most of the price one pays is for fashioning the material, rather than the material itself. In the case of the previous doors, you can pay those with a particularly distinctive or landscape landscape such as patterns, or those of particularly large size, premiums. The wholesale values of standard commercial grade cabins go from $.50-$20 each, depending on size. Custom cutting or pieces of collectible locations would be substantially more expensive. Especially even patterns are quoted as bringing in up to $200 a piece.
