Go to main contentBeachtime never goes out of season in southern California. With perfect temperatures for most of the year, you don't have to postpone your sun and sea trip until summer. With 70 miles of coastline, San Diego has many options that vary in size, accessibility, offerings and vibes - for everyone what's on everyone's mind. You'll go as far north as Encinitas to find rocky cliffs and wilder waves, or head south from Coronado to enjoy calm waters with one of the city's most famous buildings as a backdrop. So grab the kids, dog, surfboard, kayak, volleyball or lounge chair, and find out why we think these are the best beaches in San Diego.A short 30-minute drive outside downtown San Diego, this 1,750-acre oceanfront reserve promises stunning ocean views. The reserve is dedicated to preserving its namesake tree, the Torrey Pine, and surrounding wildlife, but travelers and locals come for miles of trails through pine forests and sandstone canyons, and the 4.5-mile Torrey Pines State Beach. Torrey Pines is not a hidden secret, but there's a reason the crowd is pouring in here. The reserve is open 365 days a year, from sunrise to sunset, and all boarding cars must pay an entry fee, which ranges from $12-$25, depending on the day. Coronado is one of San Diego's most popular beaches with soft white sand, plenty of water sports and the iconic Hotel Del Coronado as a backdrop. You will hit happy hour at Sunset Bar or Sun Deck Grill, and keep an eye out during low tide to see a sunken ship peak out of the water. On the north side of the island, Coronado's Dog Beach is a favourite with those who want their puppy to walk on a leash. This family-friendly beach keeps you busy, with facilities and rentals for everything from fishing to volleyball. And concerts held on Sundays during the summer are a great way to spend the afternoon. Parking can be hard to come by, but once you arrive, you will see that the problem was well worth it. This state beach known for some of the best surfing in San Diego, and the laid-back crowd that goes with it. On the north side, Cardiff Reef is where pro surfer Rob Machado and other locals catch their waves. A few steps away, Pacific Coast Grill offers two levels of ocean views tasty lobster tacos. Visit the tidal pools at low tide to see hermit crabs, marine gastropods, and other sea creatures. A well-known but tucked-away surfing spot with strong waves in La Jolla. Strong waves, large rocks and a required climb to gain access make for an untethered gem of a beach. . After your day at the beach, follow surfers to The Shack Bar & Grill - named after the Windsurfingansea surf shack - for fish tacos and a pint. This popular surfing spot is aptly named after the striking views on offer as you descend the wooden staircase leading to the sand. The somewhat challenging walk along the stairs and the lack of facilities such as public toilets make for less crowded waters - ideal if you want to catch some waves in peace. Fletcher Cove's crescent-shaped beach is protected by adjacent cliffs on both sides, with a prepared park that offers plenty of public amenities. Paved paths to the beach make Fletcher Cove much more accessible than other small beaches in the area. Families with children will enjoy the basketball courts, playground, outdoor showers and picnic areas. The La Jolla Underwater Park and the Ecological Reserve on the La Jolla Coast attract kayakers who come to explore sea caves during kayaking trips, and divers must find their way to the two underwater canyons. Harmless leopard sharks are known to get together in the area during the summer, and can be easily spotted by divers or snorkelers. Mission Beach has all the make-and-items from a Beach Boys' album cover: a bustling boardwalk, a colorful amusement park and a bustling mix of locals and tourists. The most popular Mission Beach attraction is Belmont Park, an amusement park that houses the old Giant Dipper roller coaster built in 1925. You also surf the artificial waves at Wave House-it's said to be the perfect barrel. The winding hillside path to Beacon's reveals some of San Diego's best waves, sunbathing space and a friendly neighborhood vibe that are well worth the walk down. However, that walk tends to keep crowds away, so once you get started with the water you have plenty of room for yourself. Due to the effort involved in getting to the water, this is not typically a beach frequented by families. This untempered coastline is one of San Diego's wildest beaches. Secluded by sand dunes, the vast stretch of sand provides a perfect canvas for countless water sports and activities. Just know that there are no businesses within sight of the beach - part of the attraction - so pack in what you need for the day. The unique brand of hospitality of this city combines elegant service, California history and easy luxury. The hotels in San Diego expertly report these elements and more.
