Editor-in-chief Franklin Atkinson, born March 18, 1939, is a football player then manager but also a commentator. He was known as Big Ron and later Bojangles. In recent years he has become one of England's best-known football experts. He is perhaps most famous for his singular return to expression: his statements known as Big-Ronisms or Ronglish, caused controversy during a match in which he also dropped a racist comment on television that he thought was not on display. Born in Liverpool but his family transferred to Birmingham, a few weeks after his birth, he transferred to Aston Villa at the age of 17, but never played in a game for their first team and at the end of the 1959 season he transferred to Oxford United, called Headington United. There he played with his younger brother Graham Atkinson. As a midfielder, he made more than 500 appearances and was nicknamed The Tank, scoring a total of 14 goals. From 1962 to 1968, with success in just six years, he was a player from the Southern League (5th). He was the first captain to upgrade three of his entire 10.000. Manager O started at Kettering Town and later made his manager's debut at Cambridge, where he missed out on promotion to the second division. In 1978, he was manager of West Bromwich Albion, allowing a young and colourful generation to enter the world of professional football, making him the first manager to play with the blacks in his team. He finished third in the championship and reached the quarter-finals of the 1978–79 UEFA Cup. He coached Manchester United following the sacking of Dave Sexton in 1981. United finished in 1981-1982 and the UEFA Cup. In 1982-83, after two games at Wembley, one after playing in the FA Cup against Brighton and Hove Albion, the season ended with third place in the championship. In 1983–84, Atkinson reached the semi-finals of the European Cup Winners' Cup and finished fourth in the first division. In 1984–85, Manchester United won the FA Cup again. Atkinson and his team, however, did not have the opportunity to play in the European Cup Winners' Cup due to liverpool football club's mistake and the famous match played at the Heysel Stadium in the 1985 Club Champions Cup final. Young talents such as Norman Whiteside, Mark Hughes and Paul McGrath came during his tenure. Unfortunately in the 1986–87 season, the team made a moribund start and on November 5, 1986, the club was fourth ... From the start, Atkinson was fired to make way for Alex Ferguson. In the fall of 1987, he decided to return to the W.B.A. because they were trying not to be relegated. The goal reached the following season, they are a serious competitor for promotion. But Atkinson flew to Spain at Atlético Madrid. Atkinson, despite relative success in terms of ranking, has a personality clash with owner Jesus Gil: he is sacked after just three months as manager. West Bromwich Albion right-hander Colin Addison will replace him. His departure to Spain also had a negative impact on West Bromwich Albion, his promotion significantly collapsed. He then moved to Sheffield Wednesday from February 1989 and remained there until June 1991. Although the club fell to the second division in 1990, a year later, in 1991, it regained the elite. They also won the League Cup with a 1–0 win over Manchester United at Wembley Stadium. Atkinson left Aston Villa a few weeks later. In the 1992–93 season, he moved Aston Villa to second place in the Premier League, winning the League Cup in 1994 and playing in the UEFA Cup. But despite his great achievements, he once again clashed with Atkinson chairman Doug Ellis and ron was sacked after a 4-3 defeat at Wimbledon Football Club on November 10, 1994, despite English sympathy against him, claiming Atkinson was one of the top three managers in England. Soon after, here in Coventry City phil neal, voluntarily replaced To make way for Atkinson. During his time at Coventry he brought in good players such as Gordon Strachan, Dion Dublin, Noel Whelan and Gary McAllister who will continue to struggle to stay in the Premier League. He returned to Sheffield in November 1997. Despite the poor start to the 1997–98 season, Atkinson managed to get them out of trouble, but was rewarded with a permanent contract. It was the last time he ate at Nottingham Forest in the last four months of the 1998–99 season. It wasn't a success and it wasn't fair to declare that he was a nine-thriller target by clashing with his players, including Pierre van Hooijdonk, saying he was upset by his first quality teammates. Sports journalist Atkinson worked as an expert at ITV. For several years, he played most of the network's matches as a guest in the studio, but more like Jean-Michel Larqué as a former footballer. This exhibition led him to introduce to a wide audience, but also to become a very cartoonised person in The UK. In 2002, Atkinson released a Christmas song, It's Christmas - Let's Give Love a Chance,[1] but failed. The following year, Ron Atkinson was a guest on an episode of Room 101. Atkinson also announced that he was friends with singer Renato Pagliari from Renée and Renato, and that the singer appeared surprisingly on one of the series. When Ron Atkinson resigned from ITV on April 21, 2004, after making a racist lysum live on Marcel Desailly, believing the microphone was off, This is what he is known in some schools, as a great slacker. Although transmission to the UK has ended, his interpretation has been published in several countries in the Middle East. He also left his post as a columnist for The Guardian after the comment. This isn't the first time Atkinson has made a mistake. His comments about Francesco Totti were broadcast on German television and he seems a bit of a fool indeed, this is Totti but he has received little criticism from the British press. Since the Desailly incident, Atkinson said the comments are a deviation and racist, recalling that he was the first to have a team of many blacks composed of the game. However, this did not reduce the condemnation of racism and mainstream groups. Atkinson also provided comments on the World Cup UKTV G2. Atkinson recently joined BBC Two's Excuse My French. Atkinson and comedian Marcus Brigstocke and television presenter Esther Rantzen stayed in French cities, forced him to adapt to the French way of life and language. The final aim of this course was to provide a match analysis of a french football match (Paris Saint-Germain - AS Monaco) for a French radio station. As a complete novice to the French language, he found the challenge important, but it was successful. The fact that the match in question was so mediocre left him with not much to say.
