secret and shameful part of us knows that maybe, just maybe, we couldn't. And Bowker carries that guilt. At CampoDiez a billion places we could have set up last night, the man picks up a latrine. (In the field.28) Mitchell Sanders blames Jimmy Cross for Kiowa's death. Guilt isn't completely without merit, but Sanders not only blames Cross because it's his fault (after all, as Norman Bowker points out, who knew it was a sewerfield?). He also blame. You can't accept that Kiowa's death doesn't make sense and he's sad. Like Jimmy Cross, the boy was explaining things to an absent judge. It wasn't to defend itself. The boy recognized his own guilt and just wanted to establish all the causes. (In the field.47) O'Brien (we assume the child is Tim) so he automatically accepts his own guilt in Kiowa's death that he doesn't even try to rationalize it. Instead, it methodically reviews each and every of the reasons he's guilty. Norman Bowker[...] I felt a little guilty almost, as if I had kept my mouth shut none of that would have Like it's my fault. [...] No one is to blame, [Bowker] said. Everybody. (In Camp.105). Even Azar—Azar, people! He's not immune to feelings of guilt. This is a rare moment of introspection for him. He feels somehow responsible for Kiowa's death simply because he was joking about the way he died. When he sees the body, guilt really comes home. Bowker, for his part, foreshadows Jimmy Cross's reflections (which comes next!) when he points out that it is both everyone's and anyone's fault. First Lieutenant Jimmy CrossWhen a man died, there had to be guilt. Jimmy Cross understood this. You could blame the war... A moment of carelessness or bad judgment or mere stupidity had consequences that lasted forever. (In the field.115) Jimmy Cross (surprise, surprise) blames himself for Kiowa's death. It reviews all the many, many places that blame could be assigned—war, rain, God, munitions manufacturers, voters, etc.—and concludes that while the fault is somehow universal, it is also intensely personal. Jimmy chose to camp in the country in the could be assigned war, rain, God, munitions manufacturers, voters, etc.—and concludes that while the fault is also intensely personal. Jimmy chose to camp in the country side despite warnings from the old Vietnamese women. In fact, it's his fault. Good shapeThere are many bodies, real bodies with real faces, but I was young then and afraid to look. And now, twenty years later, I'm left with faceless responsibility and faceless pain. (Good Form.7) Civilians might assume that ignoring the face and body of a man you've kille
