He's not a wolf-hunting expert. Alspite spending most of the year around wolves and hunting nearly the entire winter from his family's home in the Idaho dessaver, he says he is more of a permanent student than a knowledgeable teacher. Williams, who worked as a smoke jumper for the U.S. Forest Service in the summer, says you can hunt these things for a lifetime and never learn them. Even if you think you've solved them, they'll pull an antics that make you think second to what they know. My friends are so used to coming back to me with a-that-got-away story ... An Idaho nonprofit promotes wolf harvesting by repaying hunters and trappers for accrual expenses when killing wolves. It's not exactly a reward, but the group will pay up to $1,000 in cash to members who send receipts purchased in related to the discovery, hunting or trapping of wolves. These include fuel, weapons, ammunition, traps, gaming cameras and even licensing fees. Hunters and trappers keep the wolves they harvest. In order to qualify for refunds that vary depending on idaho's season and region, buyers must be members of the organization. Membership levels vary from $35 per year to $1,500 lifetime membership. According to the group's website, we are working with athletes and Idaho biologists to determine which areas wolves are most affected by to create repayment zones. As with SO MANY Hunters, my godmother was with squirrel blood. A fat fox squirrel who thought it was hiding in a post-oak oak tree behind my grandmother's house dropped to a load of 6s from my H&R 12-gauge after several frustrating hide-and-peek rounds. My last-minute strategy was to wait. But as I had the squirrel's body in my hands, the feeling of satisfaction warmed my young body. And although I wasn't fully aware at the time, there was a lesson here: When all else fails, perseverance and patience are a deadly combination. In the decades since, the wisdom from this hunt has contributed to more hunting successes. Runs when a gobbler pauses behind ... A...
