Hotel at a Glance: Bodega Bay Lodge Located along California's famous coastal highway, this 4-star hotel has a great view. The infinity hot tub (limited capacity) overlooks the city's bay of the same name and sea breezes glide past landscaped gardens and outdoor heated swimming pools. Seasonal dishes such as omelettes made with locally sourced eggs and cheese in the morning and fresh seafood in the evening are available at the on-site Drakes Sonoma Coast (it is highly recommended to pre-order breakfast and dinner in advance). Awards: TripAdvisor's 2020 Traveller's Choice Bodega Bay, California: Tiny Fishing Village and Site of Hitchcock Film Bodega Bay located along California's rocky Sonoma coast, about 70 miles north of San Francisco. Much of the town's activities focus on the harbour of the same name. Professional fishing fleet and towing sports crab dungeness, king salmon, and cod. Guests can watch the boats caught and then dine on fresh seafood at the local restaurants. Whale watching tours are also popular; Thousands gray whales pass through the area from December to May as they migrate south. Fans of Alfred Hitchcock may have recognized Bodega Bay as the setting for his 1963 film The Birds. Potter Schoolhouse, which has a prominent presence in the film, still stands today. But don't worry: in real life, there is nothing murderous about local bird populations. As you walk along the trails and granite bluffs of Sonoma Coast State Park, keep an eye out for stingers, pelicans, and sandpipers. Read on for more on these small garbage disposals. Dust mites are permanent housewife, free to load out of our dead skin cells and make themselves comfortable in our beds. Unlike a distant cousin or a persistent vacuum saleswoman, they are difficult to kick out since they are almost impossible to see. Each mite measures about 1/80th of an inch, visible only under the lens of a microscope. Closed, they echo back to something pre-historic. Their eight legs are equipped with suckers and hooks, and their thick bodies seem to be covered in Armored. In fact, fossil evidence suggests that ticks were on Earth for 400 million years, more than 100 million years before dinosaurs. And since that time, they have made themselves at home inside wet, dark spaces pervaded Skin cells, their current favorite houses are carpets, duvets and pillowcases. Humans make it easy for ticks to find food since we shed about 1.5 million pieces of skin per hour. Although our relationship with ticks is a plus- they throw away our biological waste - ticks also pose a health threat, especially for children. Their feces can trigger asthma reactions in people with mite allergies, and their frightening appearance can provide any child with a microscope a new reason to be afraid of boogeyman under the bed.
