Created by the National Association of Pharmacy Boards, NAPLEX is an exam that every aspiring pharmacist must take to become licensed in the United States. Short for North American pharmacist liquor examination, this 250-question test consists of patient scenarios and multiple-choice requests with a time limit of six hours. Here's the worst part: With such high stakes, it can be intimidating to plan for NAPLEX. In some cases, this intimidation can become so extreme that it interferes with the tester's ability to take the exam, even if they understand the information being tested. In order to both relieve the anxiety associated with the test and help students clean up their knowledge at the pharmacy, these NAPLEX review courses are the best choice for individuals who want to pass NAPLEX and become licensed pharmacists.
