By S.L. Wolfinger Facebook and other social networking sites are becoming popular hosts of all kinds of free simulation games (Sim). The convenience of not having to download games, as well as being able to share your stats and progress with your friends, is seductive for those who might be sitting at work or at home with time available. FarmVille, a simulation game that revolves around a farm and acquires animals, plots of land and crops, as well as interacting with other farmers, has become one of the most popular games. By posting information in the news feed section of your page, farmers across Facebook can see your progress and situation with each update. A new feature that allows players to capture game images allows other players to share crop layouts, animal parades, and other extravagant scenes. Restaurant City, a fast-paced game that simulates owning your own restaurant, is also available on Facebook and playfish.com for free, without downloads. Users who play on Facebook can exchange food with each other, run desired ads for certain ingredients, and set challenges. Invite friends to work in the restaurant, design their layout, and keep the business afloat. Playfish also offers Pet Society, a quirky little sim game based on animal avatars, neighborhoods, and more. Play within the game, set your home, design your character and be on your way. Pet Society is also available on Facebook, MySpace, and Bebo, allowing multiple platforms so friends can join your custom simulation world as well. You can also step out of the virtual world and assist the World Wildlife Fund by making choices in a game. Cooking games are a fun genre. Very few allowed you to cook something. However, you get elements of arcade, simulation, puzzle, and strategy in most titles. The most popular games of this genre revolve around restaurant management, putting dishes together, and customer service. They can be quite relaxing and most games are playable for a good period of time. In any case, we think we have found a good mix of games for this list. Here are the best cooking games for Android! In addition to painting pixels infused with elements, you also have control over a wide variety of environmental elements, including temperature and weather. The real magic of The Sandbox is that all the elements behave as expected to behave: the trees catch fire if you raise the temperature of the world, the dirt falls when you paint it in the sky, and the electricity rises through the metal and shoots from the ends of the wires with sparks. Since all that action is in big pixels, it's still very believable. Outside of puzzles, you can also go freestyle to create your own creations and share them online in the growing gallery of pixel art. Although The Sandbox is free, new items are unlocked with mana points, which are awarded as you play through missions or purchased through in-app purchases. Mana points can also be used to buy particularly difficult puzzle suggestions – luckily the tips aren't too expensive.
