Many parents pay thousands of dollars annually to send their children to private schools - particularly those living in areas where public schools are poor quality. A 2014 comparison by the real estate site Trulia found that in zip codes with top-rated public schools, just 4% of children attend private schools, as compared to 19% of children in zip codes with low-rated public schools. However, that doesn't mean parents living in good school districts are spending less overall. Homes in these high-performing districts usually cost more than other households in the same area – about 32% more, according to the Trulia study. So for many families, the additional cost of housing adds up to more than what they would pay for a private school. This means parents who want the best possible education for their child have a difficult choice to make: pay directly for a private school, or pay indirectly for a home near a good public school. To evaluate that better, they need to know just how these two costs compare, and what the options are there to keep their costs down. Private Schools According to Figures from the National Center for Educational Statistics (NCES), about 4.5 million American children were enrolled in private schools in 2011-2012. More than 80% of these students were in schools with some kind of religious affiliation. About 43% were in Catholic schools, and another 37% went to school to identify as generally Christian, Jewish, or a specific Christian denomination. About 68% of all private schools have religious orientation, while 32% are ineligible. On average, the cost of paying private schools for the 2011-2012 school year was $10,740 per child, according to NCES. This is an important burden for a middle-class family. In 2014, national median income in the U.S. was $53,657, according to Census Census's office. This means a family making the median income should spend approximately 20% of its income to send a child to private schools, and 40% of two children. However, economic costs vary significantly depending on the type of school. The average tuition price was $6,890 a year for Catholic schools, $8,690 for other religious schools, and a moving $21,510 for nonsectric schools. So an average middle-income family would pay less than 13% of its income to send a child to a Catholic school, but more than 40% for a non-religious school. The cost of public private schools is easy to identify – just a fixed number of dollars per year. Calculating the cost of public schools is more complicated. You have to know what neighborhoods parents choose for schools, how much it costs to live in these neighborhoods, and how this fee compares with the cost of living in other, nearby neighborhoods. A good place to start is with Niche, a website that rates and compares U.S. school districts based on factors such as student test scores, graduation rates, health and safety assessments, and reviews from parents and students. Each year, Bee lists the 10 school districts it rates as the best in America. For 2016, the number-one school district on the Niche list is the Tredyffrin-Easttown School District. Centered in Tredyffrin, Pennsylvania - a suburb of Philadelphia – this district earns A-plus assessments for its academic performances, teachers, extracurricular activities, and more. According to Trulia, the median sales price for homes in this area is $532,500. This adds up to a monthly mortgage payment of about $2,610, based on a 30-year loan, a 20% down payment, and an interest rate of 4%. For a buyer who can only afford a payment down to 10%, the monthly payment jumps to $3,072. In nearby Paoli, by contrast, Trulia says the median home price is only $287,000, or $1,407 a month. That's a $14,436 difference a year – about 34% more than the average cost of private school tuition for a child. So a family with a child would spend less of living in Paoli and send children to private schools. However, a family of two or more children would spend less of living in the Tredyffrin Village, where the extra money paid for housing would cover school expenses for all of their children. A 2014 article about school spending in money reached a similar conclusion. It compares private private public accounts to two families living in eastern Massachusetts: A family spent $2,120 per month at a median prize house in the village of Auburndale, which has some of the best public schools in the country; the other spends $998 a month for a home in a neighborhood and average school, plus an average of $782 a month to pay private schools. Adding these two expenses together, the private family is out not $340 per month. However, the math changes completely if both families have two children. In this case, the public school family saved a total of $70,000 dollars over the course of both children's school years. Keeping school expenses under control in general, it appears that public schools - even those in expensive neighborhoods - are a better deal for families with several children, while private schools have a better value for children only. However, this rule does not hold true for everyone. Parents who choose the good private school can bring tuition fees down to an affordable level, even with several children at school at once. And, conversely, making smart choices about housing can make living in a large school district an affordable choice, even with one child. Privacy Policy One way to make private schools more affordable is to choose a school with lower tuition. As noted above, religious schools - particularly Catholic people - tend to be much more affordable than nonsektrian private schools. Based on the NCES figures, a family can send two children to a Catholic school for an average price of $13,780 per year. This is a bit less than extra $14,436 a year it costs to live in Tredyffrin scrutinized rather than Paoli. Another private-school option is a Montessori school. These schools take an educational approach focused on letting kids learn at their own pace, using all five senses. Most Montessori programs are for younger children, but some extend to early a teenager. According to a 2009 survey by the North American Teachers' Association of Montessori, the cost of a year of montessori varies widely, but the median cost for students' school students is around $8,600. This makes Montessori school more expensive than the typical Catholic school, but roughly a park with other religious schools. Parents can also save money when they start their kids from a public elementary school, and transfer them to a private high school. According to the Money article, if private families' hypothetical families did so with two children, they would end up saving a total of $71,000 compared with the family in the school district pricing. Families of private school scholarships that have trouble paying private schools can sometimes bring it into their financial reach through scholarships and other forms of financial aid. Some schools have their own financial aid programs, and others participate in national scholarship programs, or state. Fund sources include: Children's Scholarship Funds. Originally started as the Washington Scholarship Fund, the Children's Scholarship Fund (CSF) now provides partial scholarships for low-income families across the country. Scholarships cover up to 75% of tuition costs, and the average amount comes in at $1,700 per child. they use for any type of school - religious, secular, or even at home school. To qualify for scholarships, families must meet a child in primary school and meet income guidelines for the National School Program. In the year 2015-2016, the fund provided scholarships to more than 24,000 students. To apply for a scholarship, parents need to contact one of their CSF partner programs in 16 states; the amount of time the process takes depends on the specific program. The Jenn Scholars Program. Run by the Jack Kent Cooke Foundation, the Scholars Youth Program provides scholarships for middle school students and high schools with top-notch classes. About 60 students receive scholarships each year, where students can be used for school, school, or parochial (religious schools) in addition to financial support, young students obtaining academic counseling, access to special enrichment programs, and other resources. Families with incomes of up to $95,000 can apply, but most Scholars Young classes from families with incomes below $60,000. The application period runs from January through April, and students know in September if they are eligible for help. A chance is better. This program is aimed at students of color in grades 4-9 who get good grades in general and are active in extraordinary activities. The program does not actually provide scholarship funding, but refers students who qualify for more than 300 middle schools and high schools throughout the country – both religious and secular – and helps them apply for financial aid from these schools. A better chance says most students apply through its program receive financial aid, but don't give a specific rate. The application process begins in February for the school year that begins 18 months later. There are many other scholarship programs and school programs that operate in particular state or region in the country. Parents can find out about programs in their area through their Private Schools website. A home nearby public schools better in general, neighborhoods and large public schools are more expensive than other neighborhoods in the same general area. However, there are some notable exceptions to this rule. Neighborhood Scout has compiled a list of neighborhoods in the country's 20 largest metropolitan areas that combine good schools with affordable home prices. Per neighborhood, the site provides the home's median cost and school district assessment on a 100 point scale, based on such factors as class size and state test scores. For the 10 largest metro areas in the U.S., the neighbor themselves are: Metro Neighborhood Area Median House Public School Rating New York, NY Queens, NY $234,924 92 Los Angeles, CA Los Alamitos, CA $411,225 87 Chicago, IL Elmhurst, IL $260,105 86 Dallas, TX Richardson, TX $259,597 90 Philadelphia, PA BY $274,086 96 Houston, TX Friendswood, TX $218,832 94 Washington, DC Laurel, MD $279,307 88 Miami, FL Hallandale Beach, FL $184,819 25 Atlanta, GA Fayetteville, GA $202,980 65 Boston, MA Brookline, MA $390,447 If your area lives in – or wants to live in – isn't part of a larger metropolitan area, Neighborhood Scout can still help you find an affordable and good school zone. You can enter your state and region in the advanced search engine the site, then choose your criteria for school quality, cost, and other features that are relevant to you, such as crime rate or walkability. However, to use this feature, you need to subscribe to the site, which costs $40 per month, $90 per quarter, or $192 per year. Another way to afford a home in a top-ranked school district is deliberately choosing to live in a smaller home. At Tredyffrin, PA, for example, Zillow lists three houses three rooms for as little as $390,000. The mortgage payment on a home like this would come at about $1,912 a month – a $698 a month savings, or $8,376 a year, compared to the median price. Last Word When choosing a place to live, school district is not the only factor to consider. For starters, you want to find a home that's close to your workplace, so you don't need to face a long community every day – maybe even one that's close enough to allow you to walk or bike to work. Ideally, you'd also like to be close to friends and family. And finally, you want to live in a neighborhood that's comfortable for you, and access to all the equipment you care about – from local businesses to a good public library. So if the neighborhood that you like best is not the one with the best schools, don't drop up on it. Instead, crunch some numbers and see how much you could save by combining an affordable home with a private school. Or, on the other hand, whether the place you are in love with has a great high school price and sky-high house housing, look for ways to find an affordable home in this neighborhood. Did you go to a public school or a private school? What would you choose for your children? Children?
