

I'm not robot

Continue

Tak invader zim tumblr

Share Tak is a female Irken and a minor antagonist in Invader Zim. His main goal was to take Zim's mission because Zim had ruined his training as an Invader. Ruthless and determined, he focused more on trying to earn an honorable title as an Invader than revenge. He claims that Zim happened to be on the road to get it. Despite his repeated statements, he did show a great deal of anger and bitterness towards Zim with good reason. Fifty earth years before Zim's arrival on Earth, Tak will go through training to become an Irken Elite, with the possibility of being selected as an Invader. However, Zim caused a major blackout in half of Devastis, when he chose to pick up a snack from a broken vending machine using a large battle mech (probably Maim Bot, as seen in Hobo 13) and shoot straight at it. The resulting explosion blew up half of the planet's power grid and trapped Tak in a training cell on the day of the inspection. Despite the catastrophic power outage, all tests continue on the other side that still works on the planet, leaving Tak stranded. He promised his case to the Control Brain he was assigned in hopes of some le ledies, but his request was immediately rejected. He was then put in the cleaning squad to do the hard work on Planet Dirt for seventy earth years before he could reclaim the examination. Appearance Not on the Ground. It has dark purple eyes, a square curved antennae, and a light gray PAK with purple spots. However, he also has some rather distinctive features that make him stand out from the usual Irkens. One is an implant in his head that has limited mind-altering abilities, such as mind control and deleting memories. However, it only works on the simple-minded. Other notable features are its custom purple and magenta uniforms; although modeled after the standard Irken uniform, it also resembles the tail suit on the back and has a small emblem on the front. Not in disguise. His boots are steel and buckle, similar to Jhonen Vasquez's other character, Johnny the Homicidal Maniac. She also has black beauty marks under her left eye and a crosshatched mouth, similar to GIR. His human disguise, which is holographic, has short dark blue hair in a bob cut, very pale skin, black eyeliner, dark purple eye shadow, black pants, and a pair of silver stud earrings. His clothes are similar to his normal Irken uniform except for a few differences; it contains four different shades of purple and blue, and has a backpack that covers its PAK. He also only has three fingers, while the other man has four. This may be the only drawback in although Keef and Moofy also have three fingers. Personality Not with MIMI. Despite the fact that he only appears in one episode, Tak's personality is not very clear. He quickly established himself as cunning, ruthless, and Vengeful. He seems to have access to a arsenal of advanced technologies, which seems to prefer simpler methods. This may offend interest in technology, and it may be an unclaimed or unused talent in the field. Since she is only featured in one episode, the better points of her personality and interests are never given attention. However, it is still very clear that he has what it takes to be a very successful Invader. Although not arrogant, he seems well aware of how his talent squandered, and hates this. He tries to redeem himself by seizing Zim's mission, reducing the Earth to a hollow shell, pumping all his magma, and filling it with snacks instead, hoping to draw directly to the highest flavor for candy. Given Tallest Purple's disappointment with the plan's failure, the idea may not be without legitimate merit. The role in Invader Zim Attempts to take over the Earth and thus steal Zim's mission makes Tak an antagonist to Zim and Dib. Tak: The Hideous New Girl is her first and only appearance, but if the show goes on longer, she'll make more appearances in the series, on Top of the Line and even more later on. His role will primarily be the conquest of Zim's world, making him the main character and antagonist. In the episode Top of the Line, he will enter the competition among other Invaders, where their SIR Unit will be put through a series of tests (unlike dog shows). The role will not sabotage the other SIR, leaving all but MIMI, SIR and GIR Skoodge and Tenn units destroyed. Since the script never recovered, his interactions with Zim during the episode will be determined. The sighting of Invader Zim (TV series) Invader Zim (comic series) Facts of Doom He speaks with something approaching an English accent, especially keeping the London variety but with the occasional rhotic r similar to the West Country dialect. Note: The voice actor, Olivia D' Abo, is also English. Also, prone to bodoki himself when around humans, his voice sounds higher tones when disguised. It was stated back in September 2016 by Eric Trueheart that there were no plans to feature Tak in the comic series (yet).[1] leading to speculation that he was being rescued for the television film Invader Zim. In addition, her voice actress, Olivia Jane d'Abo, stated on her Twitter she was excited for the film. [2] Later in the summer, she confirmed that she was working on the film Invader Zim, but she did not verify whether she was actually recording. [3] When the film came out, it was revealed that d'Abo was not voicing Tak himself, but a copy of his AI on board. However, months later on a panel at GalaxyCon 2019, Richard Horvitz and Rikki Simons claim that deleted scenes are deleted it has been revealed that Tak was imprisoned at Moo-Ping 10 and will show his ship his release. He designed his ship by modifying the Spittle Runner, painting it red, and decorating the craft with a customized version of Irken's insignia. Not using the ability to erase his mind. The spark of purple-pink light coming out of her right eye and into her left eye has psinik properties, which she uses to make Sara apologize to her and, as an added bonus, eat her eraser. He tries to erase Dib and Gaz's memories, but they seem immune to his powers, as they are much smarter than the other Skoolchildren. This strength is thought to have come from an implant placed on the left side of his head. Zim and GIR are also immune to the power of his mind, which may hint that it cannot be used against Irkens or other Sir Units. Tak is one of the few Irken known to have purple eyes: Others include The Highest Purple, Sizz-Lorr, Invader Zee, and a handful of Irkens backgrounds. It does not appear to have a high pain tolerance, as he reacts much more severely to Earth's water than Zim. While Tak is shown getting himself out of his ship at the end of Tak: The Hideous New Girl, the ship that crashed in Dib's yard is intact, leaving how he escaped alive to the debate. No mention of Roboparents Zim during his confrontation with Dib and Gaz, although he has never actually met them, which would imply that he may have been following Zim for some time. Although Zim and Tak hate each other, they have three things in common – they are not real Invaders, they both have the same work found on Earth, and they leave the planets Control Brains put them on. On that note, based on his unusual methods and abilities, many fans have theorized that Zim could not be as flawed. This seems to be supported by the fact that as mentioned above, he left his cleaning duties on the planet Dirt, much in the way Zim (known to be disabled) left his station in Foodcourtia. Also, both invaders felt they were meant for something bigger than what assigned their Brain Control. His holographic human disguise could also be a clue to his flawed nature, as it is much more advanced than his Invaders counterparts. Much to Tak's frustration, Zim actually gained Irken Invader status before being demoted to Fast Food Drone, something he could not yet achieve. Ironically, if he just waited, he'd have another chance to take the test to become an Invader. Instead he leaves his assigned planet, which may be seen as desertion by Control Brains, which can be seen as a violation because it was not meant to live on earth for 70 years and was not exiled like Zim. When Zim claims that Tak's plan came from him, it can be implied that he is jealous of his ingenuity and knows it will have the full support of the Highest. No taller than Zim, maybe an inch or so. Tak's name is also shared by extradimensional entities in several books by Stephen King. Despite only making one appearance on the show before its cancellation, Tak is not very popular in fandom, with his presence among fanfiction and art fans just as prolific as the main characters. Some fans find it not very interesting. Not mentioned by Recap Kid in Issue 45, it marks the first time he has been directly referenced in a comic series, not just mentioning it indirectly through the existence of his ship. In Issue 46, GIR mentions Tak twice, only for Zim to claim not to remember it (despite mentioning his name in some previous issues). His looks and attire are very similar to Devi D. and Johnny C. of Johnny the Homicidal Maniac and I Feel Sick. The design of the clothes is very similar to Nny's, especially the tail coat and boots. And his holographic disguise looks like Devi. In comments to Backseat Drivers from Beyond The Stars, Jhonen Vasquez said that Zim would not be an enemy and would make numerous appearances in the series if the show continued. See also Dib and Tak Zim and Tak Tak/Gambar Relationship Community Content available under CC-BY-SA unless otherwise stated. Note.