The work is often referred to as Turabian (after the author of the work, Kate L. Turabian) or abbreviated title, Handbook for Writers. The style and formatting of academic works, described in the manual, is commonly referred to as the Turabi or Chicago style (based on the Chicago Manual of Style). The ninth edition of the manual, published in 2018, corresponds to the 17th edition of The Chicago Manual of Style. Structure and content of the manual Except for a few minor differences, the style and formatting described in the ninth edition of the manual is the same as the 17th edition of The Chicago Manual of Style. While the Chicago Manual of Style focuses on providing guidelines for publication, the Turabian Handbook for writers of research, excretion and dissertation is designed to create and submit academic work; where the two works differ in small ways, the Turabian handbook aims to better adapt to the requirements of scientific work, as opposed to published works. As such, the textbook is described as an authoritative student resource in the 'Chicago style'. [3] Part 1: Research and writing Part 1 of the manual approaches the process of research and writing. This includes providing practical advice to formulate the right questions, read critically and build arguments, and help authors develop and correct the article. [3] Originally added from the seventh edition of the manual, this part is adapted from The Craft of Research. [4] [5] Part 2: Source Citation Part 2 of the Manual examines two methods sources used to create the work: (1) note-bibliography style; and (2) the author's date style. The nut-bibliography style (also known as note and bibliography style or note style) is popular in the humanities, including literature, history and art. This style contains sources quoted in numbered footnotes or endnotes with each note equivalent to a raised (superscript) number in the text. This style also uses a separate bibliography at the end of the document, which lists each source. A more concise author date style (sometimes referred to as a reference list style) is more common in physical, natural, and social sciences. This style consists in the fact that the sources are briefly quoted in the text, usually in parentheses, by the author's name and the year of publication with quotations in parentheses corresponding to the entry in the reference list, where there is full bibliographic information. The manual provides extensive examples of how to cite different types of works (e.g. books, magazine articles, websites, etc.) using both citation styles. Part 3: Style Part 3 of the manual deals with spelling, punctuation, abbreviations, and treatment of numbers, names, special terms, and song titles. This section also provides guidance on how to include offers from different sources, as well as format tables and numbers. [7] Appendix: Paper format and submission The appendix contains detailed requirements for formatting research work as well as ex-submissions and hearings. General formatting requirements include recommendations for paper size and margins, options for choosing a typeface, spacing and indenting text, page break, and using titles. The formatting requirements for specific items include the order and formatting of the content in the front matter, the main matter (text), and the back of the song. The add-on also describes the preparation and transfer of files, both electronically and in the form of paper copies. With regard to formatting and style, however, the manual notes that it can be supplemented or even invalidated by conventions of specific disciplines or preferences of individual institutions, departments or instructors. Furthermore, the handbook consistently reminds students to review the requirements of their university, faculty or instructor, which take precedence over the guidelines presented [in the manual].
