June Johnson got into business by accident. A retired college professor and former professional singer, Johnson started Voice Power, a voice training service in 1990 after helping a friend find a better job by training him to speak with more authority. As a result, Johnson heard from others in similar situations. Soon after, he found himself giving workshops at private companies and at the University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee.Johnson likes to say he got into the business by accident. However, the way you market Voice Power services is not an accident. Unlike many small businesses, Johnson immediately realized that he needed help spreading the word about his business. He met John Murphy of Murphy Associates, a business in Brookfield, Wisconsin, who creates marketing plans for home-based businesses and small businesses. Although Johnson knew little about marketing when he started, he acknowledged that marketing was a vital part of his business plan. They think they don't have to, Murphy said. Or they don't realize the importance of an organized effort to put your name in front of people. No business is too small to have a marketing plan, he said. Who needs a plan? Anyone who wants more people to know about their company than they already do, Murphy said. Small business owners have to understand that if you put a good plan together and implement it, it will end up paying for itself. Sometimes small businesses wait until there is a crisis before starting a marketing plan, said Alan Gaudynski, who started his own prying and marketing company at Brookfield in 1990.Entrepreneurs should think of a marketing strategy when they are developing their business plan. Where a company sometimes fails in marketing is putting too much emphasis on a particular tactic. For example, the business owner believes that all he needs to do is put together a nice brochure about the company, but he's done little research beforehand. Entrepreneurs on small budgets don't need to spend a lot of money on marketing to have an effective plan. You can call a consultant for less than $1,000, Gaudynski said. Or they can do their own research. Public libraries are full of books on how to market their business, he said. In addition, some local chambers of commerce and business and trade associations provide advice through committee meetings, workshops or seminars. Sharon Lerman, who started a consulting business outside her home, turned to the Retired Executives (SCORE) and the U.S. Small Business Administration (SBA) for help writing down their business plan and marketing strategy. The SBA provides a marketing checklist for small retailers and an overview of small business marketing. I don't use it in any formal and written communication, but I use it too often in conversation and text messages. We're all writers here, so let's see if we can't come up with some alternatives to the word cool. (Cool as an adjective that means good or excellent: That Tesla is great.) You may have heard the word Word up, which probably originated in hip-hop. Looking at its meaning—which is transmitting agreement, recognition, and approval enthusiastically—gives us a pause to think about what about our word? Actually, when it comes to communicating who we are, all we have is our word. So what power are we giving him? What location? How are we keeping our word through our business? We have all experienced a disconnect between the words we want to convey to our customers and the words that reside within us. In the simple but profound book Los Cuatro Arrangements, the author Don Miguel Ruiz reminds us to be impeccable with our word, using his power for truth and love. Our challenge becomes to find the best means to express and deliver our message in our voice, while making sense, remaining visible and creating value those with whom we share our words. Consider the newsletter as a tool to achieve that goal. Increasingly in our work/life we see the need to build relationships, establish networks, share news and build community. Companies Companies the sole owners of established corporations are using newsletters as a marketing tool to achieve those purposes. A newsletter keeps you in front of customers, prospects and colleagues; gives you a platform to share your approach; and helps you clarify your point of view. Newsletters also work to excite employees, distributors, sales reps, and news media with your service or brand. Add to it the fact that newsletters are easily forwarded and archived, interactive, and have a low variable cost. Done well, newsletters are a perfect and economical way to market your business. Of course, sculpting the time to create a newsletter can seem difficult and the real task of writing them can seem daunting. So don't do it alone, look at the experts. Joan Mansbach, an award-winning marketing writer/consultant with experience in the consumer lifestyle, writes newsletters for customers and provides an easy and unique solution. You can take care of both writing and distributing to the entire package database. Thanks to technology and a variety of creative templates, newsletters can be created to graphically reflect our businesses and services in color and design. Dianne Coles, a leading image consultant from New York, had this to say: Newsletters gave me the opportunity to connect with my clients. In turn, they shared my costume tips and motivational excerpts with their friends, resulting in several new clients for me. Newsletters became an effective network outreach opportunity. Michael Katz, author of It Sure Beats Working, runs Blue Penguin Development, a service that offers personalized e-newsletters for professional services companies. Constant Contact, an email marketing solutions resource, distributes newsletters and creates online surveys, and Published Daily is a new provider of pre-written articles and newsletter distributor. While it is difficult to quantitatively measure the direct results of newsletters as a marketing vehicle, those who use and receive them attest to the results. When you decide to grow customers through a newsletter you will follow, the seed you will plant will germinate and its value will flourish in your customers' response. In these times when mega-marketing budgets are scarce, the newsletter has become the small engine that could, accompanying, creating credibility, gaining confidence and delivering the goodwill of its word, as well as the relevant information that its customers will appreciate. Think of your newsletter as a form of networking. its recipients choose to share it with their colleagues and friends, the viral chain begins to lead to the expansion of their customer base and an increase in referrals. The key is to keep it succinct and useful by sharing concised tips, miniature industry updates and trend data, quick, fast tips, other wisdom. Let your newsletter speak for you. Think also of the words of Henry David Thoreau: Be faithful to your work, your word, and your friend. As the images progress, it's not the most mind-blowing ad you've ever seen, but the image of two consecutive blank New York Times pages, purchased to promote Fox's upcoming film, The Book Thief, is striking. New York Times – Pages A9 & A10The pages are not completely blank: the Name of the Times, along with the date and page numbers (A9 and A10) appear at the top of each page. According to Deadline, the two full-page ads had to be approved by the Times advertising rules team, which commented that the underlying message of the ad campaign, Imagine a World Without Words, echoes the film's narrative. As for putting the name, date, and page numbers at the top, making the pages look like editorial pages in the paper, there was no problem: As with any full-page ad, both pages feature the Times header, which includes the Times logo, date, and page number, Poynter.La a spokesperson told the institute at the bottom of the second page included the URL of the film's website. , wordsarelife.com, which presents real images of the Holocaust film in which a young woman steals books to share with others, during a time when books routinely burned in the streets.
