Recently, corporate social responsibility company vice president D.N. Turner opened up about her approach to Dished, an event hosted March 1 in Chicago by Senior Housing News. What's it like being a gay worker during the recent anti-gay controversies? Senior living feasts were Dished's focus, but Turner focused less on how Chick-fil-A makes its food and more on the makings of its famous company culture. Atlanta, Georgia-based organization reports franchise retention rate of And its franchisees enjoy one of the lowest recycling rates in the industry, according to Turner. The company believes there is a very specific reason for this, Turner said. We attribute [our retention rate] to knowing our 'why', she explained. In other words, all Chick-fil-A employees believe in the company's mission, and that contributes to their willingness to work around Chick-fil-A, day after day. Start studying Chick Peel's front-team notes. Learn vocabulary, terms, and more with tabs, games, and other learning tools. Since 1964 Chick-fil-A has been home to the original two-pickle chicken sandwich on a bun with toasted butter. However, we also offer many healthy alternatives to typical fast food. All the while, corporate representatives know what to look for when they visit franchise locations for an accurate sense of restaurant quality, and so do many senior housing providers, all at Chick-fil-A know they're not above all work - including roadside garbage cleaning. Define the 'why' despite its impressive retention rates, Chick-fil-A is not immune to turnover, especially at the restaurant level. This is a situation that senior life providers are well acquainted with, with tight labor markets worsening caregiver crunch and high turnover rates. Multiple-brand strategies in a senior housing ad I see this war for the talent we're in right now, Turner said. Like many senior housing workers who work hourly in the dining and bistro rooms of communities - as well as in other departments - the hourly workforce at Chick-fil-A restaurants is made up of relatively young people. Our hourly employees are 16, 17, 18 years old, mostly, Turner explained. Because of their age, two-hour Chick-fil-A employees aren't necessarily looking to work for long-term Chick-fil-A franchisees. However, the reason the company is in business, being a loyal steward of everything deposited [it], has helped it retain employees of all ages, executives believe. Each franchisee can choose why of their own, Turner noted. Inevitably, Chick-fil-A restaurants won't always be able to impress customers. It is important for companies - food service or otherwise - to press a virtual reset button if they click some kind of road teacher. Tasting the cabbage salad, clearing the exit ramp of course, Chick-fil-A not only wants to score high scores with its employees - it wants to score high scores with its customers as well. Here, too, the company seems to be shedding competition. In a recently released Harris poll rating the reputation of the nation's best-known companies, Chick-fil-A came in fourth overall. It was the only restaurant chain in the top 50. Turner outlined several strategies for ensuring consistent, high-quality service is delivered, even by its young workforce. When top executives visit the community, they might want to ask themselves if they're tasting the cabbage salad. For a while, Chick-fil-A sold coleslaw in all its restaurants, which had to be done just right and yet it was a tricky dish to make, according to Turner. The cabbage had to be cut a certain way, there had to be enough carrots. So when representatives from the Chick-fil-A Corporation visited different franchise locations, they would always ask to taste the cabbage salad. If the cabbage salad were true, everything else would probably be true, Turner explained. Chick-fil-A also pledges to make an extraordinary impression on anyone who encounters the brand, whether in a restaurant or not. Trash on the side of the exit ramp is two miles from the corporate office, although technically it was the responsibility of the local municipality. He wanted to improve the experience of visitors to the headquarters building. Also, Collins' willingness to do work that was thought to be beneath him has been captured, and now other people who work at Chick-fil-A's company headquarters stop similarly when they see garbage a few miles from here. After all, they don't want visitors or even people who travel by to have anything but nice thoughts about society. Ultimately, senior life providers and Chick-fil-A seem to share the same goal: Chick-fil-A wants to create extraordinary experiences, Turner said. Written by Mary-Kate Nelson Nelson
