If you register after the normal deadline but before the late registration deadline, you will be charged an additional late registration fee of $30. Act registration costs are $55 for the ACT without writing and $70 for the ACT with writing. If you miss the standard deadline and register for a test date before the late enrollment deadline, you will need to pay the standard registration fee on top of the late $35 registration fee. Online score release date refers to the latest possible that you can get multiple-choice points without your essay points (if you take the SAT with an essay or ACT with writing). Most test ijat receive scores online within two weeks of the SAT test or within 10 days of their ACT test date. In both tests, your essay results take a little longer. You usually have to wait 3-5 days more for your SAT Essay score and two weeks more for your ACT Writing score. SAT and ACT test dates and deadlines 2020-2021 (international) Here are the 2020-2021 ACT and SAT dates for test takers outside the United States and all U.S. territories (this includes those testing in Canada). In Canada, for example, those who have taken the SAT will have to pay the US basic stating fee as well as the $43 regional fee. These regional fees range from $43 to $53. Also note that there is no late registration option for international SAT takers, but there is one for ACT takers. For those taking international ACT tests, the late registration fee is $32 - that's $2 higher than the late registration fee for ACT test days in the US. All international ACT testers will have to introduce the computer version of the ACT, which was introduced internationally in September 2018. (Although it is not yet available nationally, online ACT will be rolled out across the U.S. from September 2020.) As a result of this change, from paper testing to computer testing, ACT scores are released much faster for international test takers than for US test takers: you should usually get your multiple-choice results just two working days after the test day. The best SAT and finding for you: 6 Critical Factors to Find the Best SAT and ACT Test Date You Need to Consider The Following Six Six before deciding on the date on which you want to take the test of your choice. #1: How many times are you going to take the SAT/ACT You should try to take the SAT/ACT at least two or three times in total: First of all, in the fall, your junior year's second in the spring of your third summer or autumn senior year (if necessary) Because juniors have plenty of time before college application periods, they can take the SAT or ACT for almost any test day that works for them. If you plan to take the test twice in your junior year (which we recommend you do!), aim to take your first SAT/ACT on any of these test days: SAT: October, November, December ACT: September, October, December Next, try to take your second SAT/ACT in spring or early summer for your junior year from these test days: SAT: March, May, June ACT: February, April, June If you still haven't hit your SAT or ACT target score, you can take the test for the third time in the summer before your senior year or autumn. Which test days work best for you depends on a number of factors, including how much total time you need to take to study (see #2), when your college applications are due (see #3) and whether you have significant commitments that take precedence over the exam (see #6). #2: How much study time do you need We usually recommend studying at least 3-6 months before taking the SAT/ACT. But before you start preparing for the test of your choice, you need to figure out how much time you need to make to reach your goal score – the SAT/ACT score you need to get into the colleges you're applying for. Check out our step-by-step guides to learn how to set the SAT/ACT finish result. Once you've scored your goal, it's time to find your base score. This is the score you start with before you start preparing for the test. To find your baseline, take the official SAT/ACT training test. Be sure to mimic the actual testing conditions and observe the official time limits. When you're done, take a test to get your baseline. Then subtract the base score from your goal count to calculate how many points you need to improve. For example, let's say my SAT score is 1260 and my base score is 1120. By calculating, we get this: 1260–1120 = 140 points. Finally, check out the conversions below to see how many approximate hours you need to do to get to the finish line on test day: SAT 0-30 point improvement: 10 hours 30-70 point improvement: 20 hours 70-130 point improvement: 40 hours 130-200 point improvement: 80 hours 70-130 point improvement 2 Improvement of 00-330 points: 150 hours+ ACT 0-1 ACT point improvement: 10 hours 1-2 ACT point improvement: 20 hours 2-4 ACT point improvement: 40 hours 4-6 ACT point improvement: 80 hours 6-9 ACT point improvement: 150 hours+ As you can see, the greater the point improvement you need to make in the SAT or ACT, More hours you need to study. In our example, in our example had to increase my SAT score by 140 points; This means about 80 hours of preparation. Knowing how many hours you need to prepare sat/ACT, you can choose a good test day. Usually you want to make preparations up to 10 hours a week. If you have to study a total of 80 hours, you can split this time over a four-month period, giving you about five hours of preparation time per week. #3: Deadlines for your college application If you plan to take on the SAT/ACT as a senior, you need to pay special attention to future college application deadlines to ensure scores reach schools on time. Most of the applications periods for higher education institutions are in the autumn or early winter of your senior year. The most common application period is 1. The rapporteur was Mr S. But if you are applying for an early or early decision, you may have an application period in early November, possibly in October. At the same time, some schools have much later than normal application deadlines for February, March, April, May or even summer. So these schools guarantee you the most flexibility in terms of when you can take the SAT or ACT senior. The following chart shows when the best SAT and ACT test dates are for you depending on when the fastest college app deadline is. The latest recommended SAT/ACT test days are dates that guarantee your scores will reach your schools on time before the application deadline, while risky SAT/ACT test days are dates that might get your points to your schools on time – choose the latter at your own risk! College App Deadline Last Recommended SAT/ACT Test Day Risky SAT/ACT Test Day October SAT: July SAT: September November SAT: September SAT: September SAT: October SAT: October Sat: October SAT: October SAT: October SAT: November SAT: November SAT: November SAT: December SAT: December SAT: NoneACT: None March SAT: December SAT: December SAT SAT: February SAT: February SAT: MarchACT: None May SAT March: February SAT: None: April June SAT: March APRIL SAT: April SAT: MayACT: None July* SAT: April SAT: JuneACT: June August* SAT: June SAT: June SAT: June SAT: NONE: July September* SAT JuneACT: July SAT: AugustACT: None *These late application deadlines come after that, after completing your high school senior #4: SAT/ACT scholarship deadlines If you are applying for scholarships, who use your SAT or ACT points, you want to make sure that the test days you choose are sure to get your points to your scholarship organization or school on time. These scholarship deadlines are probably the same as the deadlines for your college application, but you should always check in advance if they are different! #5: AP tests, IB tests and other important tests Another factor to be taken into account available act and dates are when other important exams are. Most importantly, you don't want to choose a SAT/ACT test date around or around another important test, such as the AP Test, the IB Test, the midterm or the finals. This is really doing to overwhelm you and also means you should study two completely different tests at the same time (no thanks). Also consider your current test schedule before considering specific SAT and ACT test days. Below are the rough schedules during which you're likely to be quite busy with other tests (and therefore it's worth avoiding taking sat or ACT): Test estimated test date SAT and ACT test dates to potentially avoid AP tests First two weeks of May SAT: MayACT: IB tests End of IB courses in May (November in the southern hemisphere) SAT: May, November ACTIVE: October mid-term semi-finals usually in autumn and March in spring SAT: October, MarchACT: October, April Final exams Class/semester final exams, usually in autumn and May/June in spring SAT: December, May, JuneACT: December, June Although taking sats or ACT is not impossible for the same reasons when you have other tests, the only way you are likely to do good in all of them is to fully commit to finding time to study and organize your preparation schedule. #6: Your personal and personal commitments The last conscious factor is your duty and excess commitments. These commitments can be, for example, part-time work Placements A sport or team you play in a club, group or society, you're part of a family member you're caring for an event that you help with a family vacation or trip Make sure you don't schedule sat/ACT test days around the time you expect to be busy with non-school-related issues. The best way to track your schedule is to post future events and commitments to your calendar or designer. Conclusion: Finding the best SAT and ACT dates in the US for both SAT and ACT amounts is managed seven times a year. But choosing among so many SAT and ACT test days can be tricky because there are numerous factors you need to think about. Here are the top six factors to consider before choosing a test date: How many times do you plan to take SAT/ACT How much study time do you need College application deadlines SAT/ACT scholarship deadlines AP tests, IB tests and other important exams Extracurried and personal commitments Remember that even if you don't get the points you want, you can always take the SAT or ACT again and give it a second chance! What's next?
