Squirrelflight's Hope is the Twelfth Edition of the Warriors, which takes place in the middle of the sixth arc, A Vision of Shadows, and the beginning of the seventh arc, The Broken Code. Three moons after the Clans changed their borders to accommodate SkyClan at the end of The Furious Storm, they are changing their minds about the whole thing, much to the displeasure of Squirrel Flight. ThunderClan and ShadowClan are not making use of the additional territory that WindClan and RiverClan have given them, and the other Clans are beginning to want it back. At a meeting of leaders and deputies, Squirrel Flight has an idea that can work for everyone: there is some territory farther from the lake, roughly along the border of ShadowClan and ThunderClan beyond the abandoned twoleg nest; Clans simply never had the need to use it before. Leafstar is not too heated with the idea of SkyClan moving once again, and Bramblestar is unhappy about Squirrelflight apparently hurting him by suggesting this. (They're at a rough spot in their relationship, especially after Squirrelflight tells him that she wants more kits and realizes that Bramblestar doesn't.) Squirrels are certain that she is right, however, and decides to visit Leafstar and travel with her to non-use territory to explore it and see if it can be suitable for SkyClan. The territory looks good, and they even discover the site of an evidently abandoned camp site that would be perfect... but oops, it turns out that it is not abandoned: it currently belongs to a group that quickly takes the two prisoners. This new group is a traveling group of cats calling themselves The Sisters. They are friendly enough for Squirrelflight and Leafstar, and even agree that SkyClan can take over the territory once their moonlight leader has their kits and they move on, but they refuse to let the two leave in case they will bring their Clan Mates back. SkyClan and ThunderClan eventually send a rescue team and find them, and the Sisters allow Leafstar and Squirrelflight to return home. Leafstar is pleased with the new territory and agrees that she will move SkyClan there, and Squirrelflight is glad that she was right and that the Clans only have to wait a moon to claim the new territory peacefully. Things don't go as well as squirrel flight expected, though. Once the Sisters find the smell of ShadowClan near their camp, they follow him to shadowclan territory and end up getting into a fight with one of his patrols, leaving a permanently deafening ShadowClan cat in one ear and one of the Sisters close to death. The Clans decide that the Sisters are enemies, and ThunderClan discusses whether to heal the wounded because of this (Bramblestar eventually gives in and allows it.) In the midst of all this, Squirrel and Bramble continue to enter into discussions, try to project the image of a front united to your Clan, especially for your daughter, daughter, that reveals that she is expecting kits. The tragedy comes as thunderclan cats begin to get sick, the worst of which are Sparkpelt's companion, Larksong, and Sparkpelt herself. Clans suspect the Sisters because of their prejudice, but the Sisters really know the cause and cure (certain prey became poisonous to cats after eating a new invasive plant brought by Twolegs.) While Larksong dies alongside Sparkpelt, stress causes Sparkpelt to go into labor early, and one of his kits dies alongside his father. Clans begin to become impatient with the Sisters. Moonlight kits haven't arrived yet, but the Clans want them to leave, as WindClan and ThunderClan have begun temporarily sharing the disputed territory on their border and this has left ShadowClan and RiverClan angry because ShadowClan doesn't want to do the same with the new land they've been given. They try to reason with the Sisters, and send the Clan mediator, Tree, who does not work well because of Moonlight's web, and the fact that Tree is actually Moonlight's son and harbors a fair amount of resentment toward her (the Sisters send their male kits since they are barely old enough to hunt for themselves.) The day comes when the Clans have had enough and decide to attack the Sisters the next day. Both Squirrelflight and Leafpool dream of kits in danger that night, and they flee to sisters' camp to find Moonlight in the middle of a difficult kitting. They end right after the attack party arrives. The Sisters still refuse to leave even when surrounded by enemies, and take refuge in a small cave. Tigerstar orders his warriors to dig them up, and this causes the cave to begin to crumble. Squirrelflight and Leafpool save the kits, but are unable to escape to make it out of themselves before the roof collapses on them. The two wake up in StarClan territory and are greeted by Larksong, who tells them that they are not yet dead, but their lives are at stake. Firestar appears and warns that they may not be allowed to stay at StarClan due to their disappointment over the Leafpool kits all these years ago. A trial is held, with Bluestar, Yellowfang, Tallstar, Crookedstar, Moth Flight and Littlecloud as the judges; Squirrelflight and Leafpool have to explain their reasoning behind the breach of the warrior code. Ultimately, they decide that Squirrelflight and Leafpool have done more good than harm, and that if they die now, they will be welcome at StarClan. Meanwhile, they are free to explore the starclan hunting grounds. They spend time with lost friends and family, including the lost kits of Squirrelflight Dandelionkit and Juniperkit (litter companions of Alderheart and Sparkpelt), as well as Hollyleaf. It should also be noted that is there and does not react to squirrel flight; Hollyleaf says that being around doesn't bother her. Bothers, since all that had happened between them seems so far behind them now. They also spend some time watching the Clans while they are there. Squirrelflight really wants to come back, and does her best to try to let her family know that she loves them. At one point, Squirrelflight wakes up in her real body in the medicinal cat room and realizes that Leafpool looks strange by her side, but at times she's back in StarClan. It is then that she sees that Leafpool now has stars in her skin, and realizes that her sister is dead. Leafpool explains that she has been so happy at StarClan and that she feels she has returned home, and the two exchange an emotional farewell, promising that they will never actually part ways and that they will see each other again one day. Firestar tells Squirrelflight that she is cured enough to return to her body now, and she does so. Squirrel flight recovers, and the Clan makes vigil for Leafpool. Squirrelflight uses her StarClan experiences to help get Sparkpelt out of her pain - she passes on a message from Larksong, convincing Sparkpelt that it is true by revealing the name Larksong had given to her deceased kit, which the couple had previously decided and never told anyone. She visits SkyClan shortly after. The Sisters are staying with them for now until they are ready to travel again, and the Clan is preparing for their move to the new camp. Squirrelflight is sad to see that Moonlight died of his injuries, but is comforted by the fact that the Moonlight Sisters had named the Moon, Squirrel and Leaf. At kits the next Gathering, the Clans honor the sacrifice of Leafpool. Squirrelflight reveals to the Clans what Firestar has told him - that they need to turn to StarClan, not far away - and the Clans agree. Squirrelflight and Bramblestar apologize for what happened between them, and then look at the night sky, where they see a new star. The squirrel flight knows Leafpool's taking care of them. Manga Summary at the end/On the first day of squirrelpaw and leafpaw training, they are shown thunderclan territory by their mentors, Dustpelt and Cinderpelt. Brambleclaw appears and teases them briefly, but then they keep going. Squirrelpaw decides to chase a rabbit, with Hot Leafpaw on his heels in an attempt to bring her back; this results in them falling off a small cliff into the river. They are able to leave shortly thereafter, but have been separated from their mentors and are lost. They use their limited knowledge to try to find out where they are, to stay safe from a hawk, and to avoid eating any fruit they are not familiar with. Their mentors eventually find them and praise them for making such smart decisions, while Brambleclaw apologizes, feeling responsible for making Squirrelpaw feel the need to herself. As they return to camp, they reflect on about The day did not end as they anticipated, and that they are starting different paths in life. But it was worth it, because the experience brought them closer, and they know they will always be there for each other. Tropes that appear in this book: Afterlife Welcome: Larksong, his recently deceased Clanmate, receives Squirrelflight and Leafpool at StarClan. Alliterative family: Sparkpelt and Larksong name their kits Finchkit, Flamekit and Flickerkit. All their bases belong to us: the clans attack the sisters' camp. Cat Concert: The Sisters perform a ceremony for a deceased cat that involves all of them yowling to heaven. Dead Guy Junior: Two of Moonlight's kits are called Moon and Leaf, named after the dead mother and leafpool, the medicinal cat who died trying to rescue them. Death Is Dramatic: Larksong gains a more prominent role in this book as Sparkpelt's supporting companion, and the two are especially close as the birth of their kits approaches. He suddenly falls, violently ill, however, and dies panting while his partner goes into labor by stress and his kits are born. Death of a Child: One of Sparkpelt and Larksong's kits is stillborn. The Sisters perform a ceremony for his spirit, and he is called flickerkit by his father at StarClan. Famous Last Words: Leafpool: I found it! Gender Bender: Fidgetflake appears as feminine for a scene when the spirit of Squirrelflight visits SkyClan camp. Healthy in Heaven: Cats that are injured in life are healed in StarClan. The sandstorm actually gives this as a reason for squirrel flight to stay there instead of coming back to life: The squirrel flight may be returning to a life of being permanently crippled, as Briarlight had been (which is now healthy at StarClan). However, some took this as the book saying it's better to be dead than disabled, so after a fan emailed them, Working Partners decided to remove that line of future impressions. Is that a threat?: Bramblestar warns Tigerstar that if ShadowClan attacks SkyClan, then ThunderClan will be with SkyClan, and ShadowClan may find itself in a war it cannot win. Tigerstar's response is Is this a threat?. Tree tries to encourage the Sisters to leave so that the Clans do not attack. Moonlight asks if this is a threat, but he says he's just trying to reason with it. Trial of the Dead: Flight Squirrel and his sister, Leafpool, are fatally injured by a rock fall while helping the Sisters and their souls end up being judged before StarClan. There, the StarClan cats challenge Leafpool for breaking the code by taking a Fellow WindClan and to Squirrelflight lying about being the mother of their kits, for which Leafpool defends her sister and tells the cats that she had paid for her mistakes long ago and never regretted your kits. Leafpool then chooses to move to StarClan while Squirrelflight successfully fights go back to your family and clan. Let's Have Another Baby: Squirrel Flight wants to have another litter of kits; Not Bramblestar. At the end of the book, Squirrel Flight accepts that it's okay if she doesn't. Mayfly-December Romance: Discussed. Squirrelflight's companion became a clan leader, meaning he was endowed with nine lives. She thinks about how that means he will probably survive her, and worries that he can always take another mate after she's gone, and wonders if the reason he's not ready to have more kits now is because he has a lot more time than she does. No Animosity in The Afterlife: In StarClan, while cats tend to stick with their own Clan Companions, territorial disputes between clans are gone; Bluestar and Oakheart are mentioned to live together in what used to be RiverClan territory. The squirrel flight is also uncertain of Ashfur's presence, and Hollyleaf mentions that it was strange at first, but that the conflicts of the living world seem so unimportant in StarClan. Nostalgia Heaven: Leafpool and Squirrelflight discover that StarClan's territory is in the ancient forest where they were born, which was destroyed when they were young. Official Couple Ordeal Syndrome: After all of Bramblestar and Squirrelflight's problems spanning previous books - from their fights over Hawkfrost and Love Triangle with Ashfur, to their big backlash after Squirrelflight lied to him and claimed his sister's kits as his own - they had finally fixed things for an entire series. In this book they are back to discuss: Squirrel Flight wants more kits, Bramblestar does not. Flight squirrel tries to resolve tensions between the Clans, Bramblestar thinks she is harming him. There is even a time when Graystripe mentions that Squirrelflight will patch it up, referring to a hole in a den roof, but Millie misunderstands and asks if Squirrelflight and Bramblestar are fighting again. Other Stock Phrases: Tree to Moonlight Greeting: Hello, Mom. Refusing Paradise: Squirrel Flight and Leafpool are caught between life and death while seriously injured, and it is clear that they can choose whether to stay at StarClan, or come back to life. Leafpool decides to stay, and despite her late mother trying to convince Squirrelflight to do so too, Squirrelflight is insistent on coming back to life so she can stay with her companion. Mate.
