Start here and when you teach them to go back and start learning to play the other chord sets. Don't forget to watch the free videos on this page that show you how to play easy mandolin chords. Note: An X on a string means not playing that string. See Cm as an example. It's just a three-string shape. Of all the chords shown above the Em can be the most difficult if you have large fingers. Some people, who have trouble adapting to the tip of the index finger and the middle finger in this small space, play using only the tip of the index finger. You have to rotate your wrist a little, moving so that your fingernail side is more square up to the frets, but you may find this easier. I also invite you to consider this series of video lessons for beginners. Thousands of people have learned to play using these videos because they really work! In particular, since you are looking for easy mandolin chords take a look at early mandolin 4. Here's the progress of the agreements for Comin' Round the First, in the key of C, then in the key of G. By Wayne Erbsen Compared to the guitar, mandolin chords are easy. In fact, most mandolin chords use only two fingers or sometimes only one. In the mandolin chord diagrams below, each horizontal line represents a pair of mandolin strings. The E-string is the one closest to the ground, ground, you hold your mandolin in the playing position, and the G-string is closest to the ceiling. The numbers represent the fret. Be sure to place your fingers between, not on, the fret. The letter to the left of each chord diagram tells you the name of this agreement. The letters on the strings tell you the name of the note where you put your fingers. Each chord diagram also tells you which fingers to use. An X means you don't play this string. When you make a chord, it is essential that you go to agreement with the two fingers landing on the ropes at exactly the same time. In the G key, for example, you'll normally need these three chords: G, C, D. In the key of D, you will need D, G and A. And in C's key, you'll need C, F and G.
