We are committed to tolerance, fairness, service and exploration, not dogma and regulation. So no matter who you are or where you are on a life journey, you are welcome here. The First Congregation is a church of action, supporting social justice both locally, nationally and internationally. We saw that social includes a variety of issues, including education, hunger, shelter and access to services such as transportation and counselling. We also extend social justice every day by living as a welcoming community, opening our doors wide in the spirit of inclusiveness and acceptance, and engaging in personal efforts to make contact with others, sometimes extrevatively and sometimes in small, small, small, a way that makes a big difference. Often it serves together that brings us together. Initially the Congregation, we started our own service project, and we worked with other not-for-profit organizations to make the most of our time and resources. Our current project details, sharing and service visits are available on our website. We encourage our members and friends to explore their spiritual gifts and share those gifts with others. Whatever your gifts might be—grow vegetables, carpets, pray, horror or exert—it is necessary for our church to really live our calls to love and serve others as God has first loved us. At a turbulent time in the history of our country, Appleton's congregation unites together and makes bold moves for its people and society. Fifty years ago, the First Church of Christ sat in the heart of downtown Appleton, until its leaders decided to build a new church on the other side of the Fox River. The road is back when in Appleton, there are good river sides and the bad sides of the river. So, part of that decision was to move to the riverside where there would be more ministries, and that was one of those really important decisions, the Rev. Steve Savides said. At the time, the only building on the north side of the Fox River was home and the Institute of Paper Chemistry at Lawrence University. After exiting the red brick church in the city centre in the late 1960s, pilgrims moved forward with two capital campaigns and raised more than $1 million to build a church based around the community. It's a consolidation moment for the congregation, which doesn't always happen when you move and raise a lot of money, said Don Sevetson, a former congregation-affiliated pastor and interim senior pastor at a time of transition from the downtown location to the present. In honor of the 50 years in the church, reflective members walked across the river to a new church from the Red Lion Paper Valley Hotel.That's where the congregation began Sunday's celebration with breakfast and some history about the old church. 50 years ago, they began worshippers at an old brick church in the corners of Oneida and Lawrence and then they all joined the march across the river to a new facility on E South River Street, according to Savides. The design of the church was unique at the time because it had two buildings built across the ravine. One building houses a Sanctuary and Chapel and another houses classrooms, nurseries and theatres. The building itself and the design is very stylish and we use it, very, very much what we built for it, said Dick Uehling. He is The last surviving building committee tasked with turning the current building into a reality. The main reason for this new building is to have more space to worship worship Community. Our new members recognize us as an Open Door Church so the church welcomes community members and we host a ton of different community groups in church buildings, savides said. Savides.
