A scholarship is a gift of money or financial aid that helps students pay for college costs. Students are not required to repay scholarships. Deeper definition Students usually use the term scholarship to mean free money used to fund college tuition and other costs. A student can be awarded a scholarship for one of several reasons: maintaining a high-grade scoring average or from a particular state or ethnicity. Scholarships can be awarded by both universities and external organisations. Many scholarships are awarded through competition or on the basis of achievement. Depending on the organization sponsoring the scholarship, applicants may be required to write an essay, complete a questionnaire, or submit content. At the end of the application process, the winner is selected and the funds are paid. Scholarships are often used among themselves with grants, as neither form of financial support requires the money to be fully refunded. However, there is a significant difference between the two: grants are need-based, while grants are mostly based on merit. Examples of scholarships The biggest source of grant award is the federal government. State governments can also fund grants and grants to their residents who attend state colleges. Universities can also fund grants, but they can receive this financial support more rigorously. Scholarships come in all shapes and sizes: Academic scholarships: Merit scholarships are also called, academic scholarships are prestigious, and are awarded to students with excellent academic performance and out-of-school performance. Athletic scholarships: These scholarships are awarded to student athletes who excel at their selection, such as football, baseball, golf and volleyball.
