Get Instructions 508-860-1200 List of Claims Whether marriage or other committed relationships, intimate partnership is one of the most important aspects of a person's life. Drug and alcohol addiction affects both couples in a deep and meaningful way, such as rehabilitation and rehabilitation. Couples' therapy and other couple-focused treatment programs are an important part of exploring addiction triggers, as well as learning how to build healthy patterns to support constant calmness. Research clearly shows that recovery is much more successful and sustainable when loved ones like family members participate in the recovery and treatment of substance abuse. Genetic factors may be played when it comes to drug and alcohol addiction, as well as mental health issues. Family dynamics often play a critical role in addiction triggers, and if educated correctly, family members can be a powerful source of support when it comes to recovery. Group therapy is any therapeutic work that occurs in the group (not one-on-one). There are several different group therapy modalities, including support groups, experimental therapies, psycho-education, and more. Group therapy involves treatment and processing interaction between group members. In individual therapies, patients meet one-to-one with psychologists or trained counselors. Therapy is an important part of the treatment of effective substance abuse, since it often covers the causes of addiction, including the challenges faced by patients in their social life, family, and work/school. Life skills training involves all the skills one must have to successfully function in the world. This includes time management, career guidance, money management, and effective communication. A truly successful addiction recovery is based on the ability to not only live material-free, but to thrive. Life skills teach practical needs that work in society, which sets customers to succeed in life, and therefore sobriety. Motivational Interviews (MI) is a clinical approach to help people with substance abuse issues and other conditions shift behavior in a positive way. It is more goal-oriented than traditional psychotherapy, as MI counselors directly try to get customers to consider making behavioral changes (and waiting for them to make their own conclusions). The main goal is to complete the atmosphere and help customers become able to make healthy choices freely. Nicotine Replacement Therapy (NRT) is a way to get nicotine into the bloodstream without smoking. It uses products that make up low-low dos to help people quit smoking. The goal of the therapy is to reduce the desire for nicotine and ease the symptoms of nicotine withdrawal. Trauma therapy addresses traumatic incidents from customers' past that may affect their present experience. Trauma is often one of the main triggers and causes of potential addiction, and can stem from child sexual abuse, domestic violence, having parents with mental illness, losing one or both parents at a young age, adolescents or adult sexual assault, or any other number of factors. The purpose of trauma therapy is to allow patients to process trauma and move through and pass through it, with the help of trained and compassionate mental health professionals.
