Since the first one-man show in France, when he was just 14 years old, the artist's fame has been growing ever more. At the age of 21, Earle opened at Charles Morgan Galleries, his first of many one-man shows in New York. The response was so positive that the exhibition sold out and the Metropolitan Museum of Art bought one of its paintings for their permanent collection. In 1951, Earle joined Walt Disney Studios as an assistant background painter. Earle found Disney in 1953 when he created toot, whistle, plunk and boom animated short film, which won an Oscar and a Cannes Film Festival award. Disney has been doting the artist's life by painting stories such as Peter Pan, For Whom the Bulls Toil, Working for Peanuts, Pigs and Pigs, Paul Bunyan, and Lady and the Tramp. Earle was responsible for styling, wallpaper and color for the much-fated film Sleeping Beauty and gave the film its magical, medieval look. He also photographed dioomes for Sleeping Beauty Castle at Disneyland in Anaheim, California. Earl's painting synthesizes relentless aspects in a different style.
