Speed is calculated by dividing the distance traveled by the time it takes to travel. Speed has an additional component. Speed tells you how fast the object is going and where it is going. Therefore, if the two objects have the same speed but go in different directions, they will have Speed. Learn more... UPDATE: On August 22, 2012, the New Philadelphia zoning code was adopted in Philadelphia. R-4 districts are now RSA-2. Click here for our RSA-2 zoning guide. If you applied for zoning before August 22, 2012, information about the old zoning code is below: Typically, R-4 areas allow for single-family dwellings (and places of worship) that are separate or semi-detached. Some uses require a use registration permit; some don't. Some uses require a certificate or deviation from the zoning setup board. Uses permitted in P-4 areas are listed below. Also listed are the restrictions on the size of buildings and signs. If you have any questions or want to speak to a lawyer, please visit our contact page.
