How to load a craftsman staple gun

Staple guns are your go-to source for quick and easy installations of upholstery, furniture or trim. Staples are categorized according to their means of power. In this case, we have manual, electrical and pneumatic (compressed air) staple guns. Before you can use your staple gun, you need to figure out how to load it. Loading a staple gun can be a very challenging task for those new to its use. Figuring out how to load a staple gun is pretty close and closed deal once you know how to open the magazine. How to load a Staple GunFor your convenience and thorough understanding, we explained how to load the various kinds of staple guns. Without much thought, let's get on with it. How to load an Electric Staple GunFirst and front, remember to turn off the power supply. This would mean removing the batteries or unplugging your electric stacker from a power outlet. It is ultimately a safety measure to prevent accidental firings while loading the staple gun. Electric stacks are bottom charging. Try and find the magazine release button at the bottom of your staple. The magazine release button keeps the magazine in place while firing. Once you've pressed the release button, continue to pull out the magazine. With the magazine pulled out, keep your staple upside down and add your staples leg first. The staples will slide down to the staple nose, where they are fired. Push the magazine back into the staple until you hear a definitive click. This ensures that the magazine is locked in position and the magazine release button is fixed. Connect your staple gun to its power supply and test the firing on some scrap materials. Use scrap materials close to thickness to what you intend to fire stacks in. Stacks must be fired one at a time. Download a Pneumatic Stack gun GunSwitch from your air compressor and disconnect the air hose of the staple gun. The air hose is secured to the staple gun by a bolt, so unfastening the bolt needs to do the trick. If the bolt is tightly screwed in, you may need to use a screwdriver to help you. With the staple gun safely powered, you can continue loading. However, if your staple gun has a safety trip, remember to activate it before starting the drawer. At the bottom of your staple gun, you'll find the magazine follower who sets up your staple gun's magazine in place. Push the magazine follower away from the staple gun to release the magazine. With the magazine released, upload your staples to the track in leg-first. The staple strip should slide up and down the rail easily without getting stuck. Slide magazine back in the staple gun and confirm the magazine follower behind it. With the magazine properly attached, the staple gun can push the staples forward into the staple gun. Test the firing on suitable scrap materials of similar thickness to fire you intend to fire In. Loading a manual Staple GunThe manual staple guns usually have a strip strap at the front to avoid scratching material while using the staple gun. Start by retook this strip tape to expose the magazine. With the tape out, find the magazine release button at the back of the staple food. Press this button to release the magazine. Sometimes you may need to try pulling on the button to release the magazine. Pulling on the magazine can make a little effort if the staple is old and well behaved. Use a screwdriver to fasten this process if the magazine appears to be stuck. Otherwise, your magazine should slide out nicely and easily. Load the strip of staples bone first on track. Press the magazine back into the staple until you hear a definitive click. Test the firing on appropriate scrap materials of similar thickness that you intend to fire the staples in.
