A total of 1,790 people who entered Canada during the COVID-19 pandemic have received special ministerial permission to pass through quarantine — because their travel is considered in the national interest. Most exceptions - 84 percent - are given to professional sports league players and staff, and 15 percent are given to business travelers. When Canada closed its borders for unnecessary travel in late March, it required incoming travelers to be quarantined for 14 days as a security precaution. Many important workers are exempt from the requirements. And, under federal rules, three ministers - Foreign Minister François-Philippe Champagne, Public Safety Minister Bill Blair and Immigration Minister Marco Mendicino - have the power to release visitors from quarantine, if their cases are in the national interest. The release of the ministers' quarantine was made in consultation with the Public Health Agency of Canada and local health authorities. Those released must follow mandated health measures such as the wearing of masks and physical distancing. The government has not publicly defined what kind of case qualifies as being in the national interest. As a result, the release of quarantine has sparked concerns about the approval process. Just to say there's something in the national interest isn't good enough, said Jack Harris, MP for St. John's East and a public safety critic of the NDP. It's a matter of judgment. The question is, is the judgment done correctly? CBC News requested each of the three ministerial departments — Global Affairs, Immigration, and Safety — for details on the release of quarantines of their national interests, including why they were granted. The Global Affairs Global Affairs Exemption says the department has granted 273 quarantine exemptions. The vast majority - 265 - are business mobility exemptions granted to business travelers to perform certain jobs or tasks in Canada deemed to be in the national interest, spokeswoman Ciara Trudeau said in an email. They should absolutely justify the proximity of their travel destinations to Canada. The approval process was called into question after CBC News reported that Global Affairs granted quarantine exemptions to UPS executive Nando Cesarone for a business trip to Toronto in October. Cesarone, president of U.S. operations for global shipping giant UPS, used business travel to lobby Ontario employees to accept the company's new contract offer. The union says it's mystical why Cesarone was allowed to enter Canada and pass through quarantine. We believe the government needs to explain itself about that one, said Christopher Monette, director of public affairs for Teamsters Canada. Global Affairs declined to comment, citing the federal Privacy Act. WATCH IT | UPS executives grant exemptions to Canadian quarantine: In light of the reasons behind its 265 business mobility exemptions, Global Affairs initially provided only a general explanation, citing the Privacy Act. After CBC News pressed for more information, Trudeau's spokesman said exceptions were given to individuals in industries such as film, aerospace, manufacturing and energy to support Canadian jobs and Canada's economic recovery. He said 250 exemptions were granted to licensed pilots and aerospace workers, some of whom needed to enter Canada for training. For others, he said, their presence is contractually necessary to complete the sale and delivery of Canadian-made aircraft. Sports gave 'canadians some 'normal' office Immigration Minister Mendicino said he had granted quarantine exemptions to 1,503 athletes and professional staff with the National Hockey League, Major League Football and Major League Baseball. Football and baseball players enter Canada just for practice. The NHL, which hosts games in Canada, separates players and staff from the general public in controlled zones - known as bubbles. In strict health and safety constraints, these exceptions are given to support economic growth and recovery, and to give Canadians some 'normality' during very difficult times, said Alexander Cohen, press secretary to Minister Mendicino. Public Safety Minister Bill Blair's office said he had granted quarantine exemptions to 14 people. including three employees in the shipbuilding industry and five American General Motors representatives involved in contract talks to ratify new agreements for Ontario workers. The union, Unifor, told CBC News that direct contract negotiations were needed and that COVID-19 safety precautions were taken. Compassion exemption To be sure, the number of national interest exemptions is small compared to how many important and other workers have entered Canada since March without being required to quarantine. That number amounts to more than five million, according to the Canadian Border Services Agency. However, granting an exception to business executives did not put Chris McDonald, who felt he had to fight to see his brother before he died. On October 8, the federal government loosened its travel restrictions to allow some travelers in quarantine to temporarily violate them for compassionate reasons, such as visiting dying relatives. The day after the rule change, Chris McDonald - who lives in California - applied for quarantine exemption to immediately visit his severely ill brother Dean in Winnipeg. After repeatedly following up on calls and emails to the government, and sharing his story with CBC News, McDonald got approval on Oct 15 - just days before his brother died. It was very, very stressful, very frustrating, and really a lot of heartache because I felt like I might not be able to see my brother, he said. McDonald said he was disappointed to hear about UPS executives having to go through quarantine for business trips. Everything he did could have been done over Zoom, McDonald's suggested. I have to be there with my brother to... Hold his hand, be by his side. The Gators' gruelling hangover provided a dawnning opportunity for some programs around college football. The injury did not come close to slowing Antetokounmpo. He came back and scored 25 points and pulled down 10 rebounds. Khris Middleton scored 18 points while Bobby Portis and D.J. At least one of his peers was enjoying the show. It was Oliveira's eighth consecutive victory and by far the most significant of his career. The longest college football season ever was a limp toward the finish. And for some programs, the 2020 season has been quite painful. COLUMBUS, Ohio -- Lucas Zelarayán scored midway through the first half and added a clincher in the 82nd minute and the Columbus Crew won their second MLS Cup title, beating the defending champion Seattle Sounders 3-0 on Saturday night. Derrick Etienne Jr. also scored in the first 45 minutes for Columbus. The Crew withsted Seattle's second-half pressure and finally celebrated after Zelarayán's goal. Zelarayán, this year's MLS newcomer and the biggest signing in franchise history, was the best player on the field on the night the crew played with short hands. Columbus is without midfielders Darlington Nagbe and Pedro Santos after both tested positive for COVID-19 this week. Despite his absence, Crew is the obviously better side and Zelarayán is inciting. Columbus claimed its first title since 2008 and denied Seattle the chance to become only the fourth back-to-back champion in league history. The Sounders, playing in their fourth final in five years, are trying to become the first repeat champions since LA Galaxy in 2011-12.This year's champions have ties to Toronto FC and Canadian football. Crew is led by president and general manager Tim Bezbatchenko, who previously won the MLS Cup title with Toronto FC in 2017 as GM and vice president of their football operations. Assistant GM Corey Wray and Jaime McMillan, vice president of administration and football operations, are also former staff members of TFC's front office. Pat Onstad, Crews technical director and vice president of football operations, has 60 caps to his name as a goalkeeper for the Canadian national team. Crew defender Josh Williams also two seasons, 2015 and 2016, with Toronto.It was his first appearance in the finals for Columbus since 2015 when crews were denied the title by Timbers and current Columbus coach Caleb Porter. The franchise was almost relocated just a few years ago, but efforts to keep the team in Columbus proved successful and now there is a championship to celebrate. The loss of Nagbe and Santos seems to be the biggest story entering the finals. It was the first time this season Columbus played without one of the players in its lineup. But their team-mates - namely Zelarayán - made their absence moot. Zelarayán scored in the 25th minute from a perfect pass from Harrison Afful, got behind Seattle fullback Alex Roldan and snared his left-footed volley past goalie Stefan Frei. Six minutes later, Zelarayán made a smart play finding Etienne and his curling shot gave Columbus a 2-0 lead. Etienne began replacing Santos. Obviously, you go one goal down, it's okay. But down two of course daggers, said Seattle coach Brian Schmetzer. That's something you have to give credit to Columbus. And Zelarayán showed patience before rocketing a left-footed shot past Frei for the final goal. Zelarayán was third in the MLS Cup final with two goals and the first since Alecko Eskandarian in 2004.Seattle needed a frantic comeback in the final 15 minutes of the Western Conference final against Minnesota United just to reach the MLS Cup. Down 2-0 to Minnesota, the Sounders scored three times, including gustav Svensson's winner in stoppage time from a corner. The deficit was the same for most of the second half against Columbus, but seattle's comeback miracle just five days earlier was absent. The Sounders had plenty of chances in the second half, but the effort failed to find the net. Nicolas Lodeiro's shot through traffic in the 71st minute deflected wide. Three minutes later, Svensson's header from a corner failed to find the target. Jordan Morris had the last good look for Seattle in the 80th minute, but his header was saved by Eloy Room.Schmetzer said afterward that Lodeiro was dealing with a calf strain that limited his effectiveness. It's certainly not a good way to end your season, Schmetzer said. But I would circle back and say that clubs, teams, do come back through some adversity, and make it to another final, back to back, which is very difficult to do in a league like MLS with parity. ____\--With files from The Canadian PressMore AP soccer: and Associated Press Press
