Magic school bus gets planted worksheet free

If you've never seen a PBS Kids show, your childhood was sorely lacking. That said, if you've seen all the shows on this list, your childhood probably wasn't lacking the joys of cable television (guilty!). Regardless, PBS Kids shows offered a variety of fun and educational programming. How would I have learned the classic American literature before the age of 10 if it hadn't been for an imaginative dog named Wishbone? How would '90s teach kids about exotic animals and their natural habitats if it weren't for two twin brothers and their lemur friend? And if Bill Nye wasn't there to teach us about science, our after-school education would be sorely lacking in baking-soda experiments and lessons in electrons. Needless to say, PBS did something right: Mixing the perfect amount of whimsical and fun with an educational message, kids raised on PBS programming knew a few things about the world. We may not have known who color Power Ranger was, but we knew how to spell aardvark without missing a beat. And so, to celebrate the shows that shaped our childhood, here are the 17 best PBS programs, ranked from absolute worst to undeniably best.17. Curious GeorgeNot as good as the book, just say'.16. TeletubbiesThe was too small kid for your daily schedule, but your younger siblings were all over the 'bath.15. Clifford the Big Red DogThe giant ginger dog caught our hearts, and his gang of fellow dogs added to the fun — even if they were a quarter of his size.14. Kratt's CreatureCute boys and mower animals? What's not to love?! 13. Barney & FriendsOkay, so this is Barney, but it's a classic! Even some familiar faces like Selena Gomez appeared next to the purple dinosaur.12. The Berenstain BearsThe classic children's book was one of the few that was successfully transformed into a fun show for kids.11. Dragon TalesIf just you and your younger brother can go on such cool adventures! Emmy was completely the original Khaaleesi. btw.10. CyberchaseCyberchase made math cool. I hate math and always have, but it was fun to solve the mysteries of Hacker and his followers using simple arkenology. Bring it on, complicated comparisons!9. ZoboomafoThe Kratts brothers' second attempt at an animal-centric show, Zoboomafo, introduced children to new animals and surroundings by way of their totally real-and-not-fake-by-all lemur friend, Zoboomafool8. ZoomAs a child, you knew two zip codes by heart: Your own, and Boston, MA's.7. Read RainbowBut you don't have to take my word for it.6. Bill Nye the Science GuyBill! Bill! Bill!5. The Magic School BusIf you say you never wanted to be a student in Ms. Frizzle's class, you're a dirty liar.4. Mr. Rogers's NeighborhoodAlthough more ndived than some the station's other offerings, lamenting us the loss of Mr. Rogers, his jerseys, King Friday, and all the wonderful, ooey-gooley words of encouragement the show presented us as WishboneYou shipped Joe and Sam, you loathed evil Wanda, and you delighted in every single American classic Wishbone introduced you to. And those little Renaissance dog costumes?! Yes, please.2. ArthurSing it with me! Having fun is not difficult, when you have a library card! So. Dang. Good.1. Sesame StreetTruly, is there a better show on television? Not only is Sesame Street fun for kids, it's also a hoot for adults, with guest stars like Paul Rudd, Mindy Kaling, Katy Perry, and more. What is the letter of the day? A for awesome! Images: Tumblr; Gifsoup Courtesy of the New Oregon Trail IVs has long been considered a prerequisite for a comfortable cross-country road trip. But a young couple showed that an RV is just one solution to a long-haul trip across the United States: Steven and Lindsay have chosen to renovat a bus and turn it into their own custom home on wheels. Courtesy of The New Oregon Trail After spending a year in Florida, Steven and Lindsey bought their 1984 Blue Bird in April 2014 for $2,000 and began construction to drive the bus back to their home in Oregon. The couple write on their website, The New Oregon Trail: We built it ourselves, starting with a very interesting old bus. Using mostly recycled or second-hand materials, we were able to build the interior without spending a lot of money, and had a lot of fun in the process. First, the couple completely alerted the vehicle, tore out the Blue Bird's seats and rubber flooring and replaced it with a layer of anti-corrosion, foam, plywood and eventually wooden flooring. Courtesy of The New Oregon Trail Next, Steven and Lindsey boxed into the bus's wheel wells and built a bed frame, as well as kitchen counters of reclaimed wood. Courtesy of The New Oregon Trail The couple used corrugated metal as bathroom walls and turned an old table and handmade sofas into a dinette area. Courtesy of The New Oregon Trail Finally, the Blue Bird was equipped with sweet, homely touches, like curtains and a brass tap. Courtesy of The New Oregon Trail Including mechanical repairs (such as fresh liquids, belts, filters, and a new water pump), the couple spent a total of $6,500 renovating their bus. After completing their cross-country trip from Florida to Oregon last summer, Steven and Lindsey are now using the bus as a tiny house in Oregon. But did have you ever wondered why someone would have chosen an atypical living structure over a more traditional (if small) home? We chatted with Julie Puckett, who lives in a converted 1990 Blue Bird school bus in Stone Mountain, Georgia with her husband Andrew, dog Starbuck, and cat Mr. Butters. After moving from Chicago to Atlanta, Julie and Andrew judged several jobs as actors and musicians to afford their rent in an apartment in an emerging part of the city. They would often go days without seeing each other, and were drained of energy when they had time to relax. When it came time to renew their lease, they were forced to sit down and really assess their finances and future goals. Financial freedom and travel were both on the list, Julie told CountryLiving.com. We loved the culture and opportunities the city had to offer but had a hard time justifying the sacrifices we had to make just to stay affid. Julie says she was long obsessed with small houses before moving to Atlanta, but didn't think Andrew would consider living in one. I think he believed tiny houses were just a blur, and they could have been, until we looked at the real possibility of owning one, she explained. There are some surprisingly ingenious designs out there now that make tiny home living functional as well as aesthetically pleasing. The Pucketts set out to buy a traditional stick-built tiny house, but it wasn't long before they hit another obstacle: Having a small house built off the ground would cost at least $20,000 and most of the local builders had at least a six-month waiting list. July's next light bulb moment came when she stumbled upon a house bus while researching used tiny houses to buy. At first, my reaction was incremental, but after seeing some interior shots quickly turned into excitement, she said. The most exciting part was when I found a bus conversion done by a cattle farmer for use during calving season – it was in our budget, and only a few states away. I immediately shot down an investigation and the rest is history. Here's what the 1990 Blue Bird looked like when they bought it: Courtesy of Julie Puckett Courtesy of Julie Puckett July and Andrew had four months to renovate the bus, which was already mostly converted, before their apartment lease ran out. With the help of Julie's father, they set out to give everything within the living space several features. For example, both the bed and couch hide storage while a droplet table converts to a dog crate. In terms of design, Julie knew every detail could to open the space. The house felt like a dark, cramped cave to being cozy and calm. We painted the entire indoor bright white, used a lot of light, oceanic materials and chose metal onsanations that reflected light, he said. Said. feel much bigger now that those changes are in place. Samuel Laubscher Samuel Laubscher The couple have been living in their converted bus home for six months now, and Julie admits the tiny home lifestyle is different than she expected. I really thought it would be drastically different from apartment life, but to be honest, it's not, she explained. The layout of our home is obviously very different, and we need to think creatively and solve problem in many different ways than most homeowners. But our general day-to-day experiences aren't quite different from most people's. Samuel Laubscher For those looking to bid farewell, Julie recommends test-driving the tiny house lifestyle before you buy. It requires thoughtfulness and reflection, and it can be a very healing process, she said. Many people get anxious about the prospect of letting possessions or space go, while releasing those things can be a great way to invest more richly into yourself.
