However, to operate specialized vehicles such as ambulances or carry semi-trailers, you must apply for special permits. Most states have at least one motorcycle class, three non-commercial classes and three commercial licensing categories. Department of Motor Vehicle websites can help you sort through the intricacies of license classes. In most states, licences enter Classes A, B, C and M. Category A, B and C are still broken down by commercial vehicles. These three classes cover cars, trucks and semi-trailers. In addition, Categories A, B and C each have separate weight restrictions for both the main operational vehicle and all towed items. The Class C basic licence allows you to drive two- and three-axle vehicles up to a certain weight (in California, 26,000 lbs, respectively). The Class C licence is the standard driver's licence. With a C-Class, you can carry up to 16 passengers. A Class C commercial licence may contain endorsements that allow the driver to carry hazardous materials or more than 16 passengers. The Class B commercial licence allows you to operate vehicles up to a certain amount (usually 10,000 lbs). Class B commercial drivers can also drive non-commercial licence, you can use all Class B vehicles and tow vehicles and tow all commercial vehicles, regardless of their weight. On the non-commercial side, a Class A permit allows the operation and towing of all vehicles and trailers, with the exception of commercial vehicles, motorcycles and other vehicles that require additional endorsements. Driving a motorcycle requires a Class M. Depending on the condition, M licenses can fall into more than one category. In California, for example, an M1 licence is required to drive standard motorcycles and an M2 licence is required for motorized motorcycles. Basic licensing classes remain mostly the same from state to state. Slight differences may occur in weight restrictions for operation and towing. Some states may have special permits for new drivers (e.g., Class D licence in Georgia) and certain specialized vehicles such as a fire truck (e.g., Class A in California). Not all states have two distinct categories of motorcycle licences. Whichever category of license you apply for, you will need to take a written test and a practical exam. States often require young drivers to also obtain initial apprenticeship permits. Many DMVs offer examples of written tests to help you prepare. All licence classes also require application forms, proof of age and name, vision tests and variable fees For non-commercial licences, a licence is usually usually if you pass the written tests. After a certain period of practice, you must return to the DMV and take the practical exam. To receive a Class A or B noncommercial licence, you must already have a Class C licence in good standing and meet additional requirements. For commercial driving testing centers. To pass the commercial driving test, you will need to pass a vehicle inspection and basic tests of skills and driving, depending on the specific class. Motorcycle licences also begin with a permit process. After a period of practice, you must pass both a written test and a motorcycle skills test. Age restrictions on certain types of licences vary by state. With a Class C license, you can't tow more than one car. Class C commercial licences are required to transport hazardous materials (see Section 6 for more details). Many states have various age restrictions include L (which limits drivers to vehicles without air brakes) and N (a Class C restriction that allows the driver to use buses only 26,000 pounds or less). Endorsements are required to transport certain substances, regardless of the licence category. The Basic Class C licence holds a P (passenger) endorsement obtained through the standard road test. Hazmat transport is recognized by H approval (HAZMAT), N approvals allow you to operate tanks, T approvals allow you to operate double/triples, and an F endorsement allows you to operate motorcycles (as opposed to the only M motorcycle allowed). license).
