And while higher quality schools are usually accompanied by higher property taxes, homeowners in these districts are eventually paid through a higher home sales price. Recovering sounds great, but how much are we talking about? New research from Realtor.com shows that for entry to a desirable school district, 9% of buyers say they would pay 11% to 20% above budget. Separately, 17% report that they would pay extra to be close enough that their children could walk to and from school. Realtor.com found that 62% of buyers would go through a spa at home if it meant entering the proper school district. 50% would grant easy access to purchases, while 44% would give up space in the form of a bonus room. If the house you plan to sell is in a highly coveted school district, do everything in your power to highlight this fact in all your real estate marketing materials. Many potential buyers are parents of children currently in the school system, so be sure to get word out among local neighbors and friends. If you're buying a house, make use of a search tool that allows you to filter by school district, as district boundaries don't always align with city, town and city lines. After all, it cannot be assumed that your children will be assigned to attend the same school as children by the blog or even next door. Armstrong Roberts/ClassicStock/ArchivePhotos/Getty Images To find the school district associated with any home address in the United States, go to GreatSchools.org and enter the address on the school district's interactive map and boundaries. Then locate the school district name to get the district phone number and call the district to confirm it. After visiting GreatSchools.org to get the district name, visit the district's website. Many public school districts have interactive school search apps that allow families to enter their homes and get a list of elementary, middle and schools Corresponding. At a minimum, most have maps that show district boundary lines. It is useful to take this step, as school district attendance areas can change from year to year, so information collected from neighbors, real estate agents and other local sources may not be accurate. In addition, most state education departments carry lists of each district organized alphabetically by name, or numerically by district number, and often have maps that show boundary lines for each district. Here, you can also find district demographics, average test scores, school scores, and other useful information. As a final confirmation step, call the school district office and ask to speak to a enrollment specialist, which will help you find the right school for every child in the family. Family.
