Mar 3, 2009 Justin Bernhaut Durable and classic, vintage iron furniture is built to last. 1 out of 10 Forged iron Dining set Long prized for its ainousness and craftsmanship, the forged iron exterior furniture is off and hammer-shaped manually – unlike mold-made cast-iron items whose parts are wrapped together (and whose stitches are sometimes visible). Blacksmiths in America popularized for sized iron in the 20th century. Pictured: This Salterini dining set in the early 20th century has s considerable curved feet that don't sink into the ground. 2 out of 10 Maintenance: Once a year Although it is strong enough to sit outside all year round, the fore-iron furniture simply browns. Check the furniture every year, and if you see any rust, scree a post and cover the city with a case and paint. (Painting antiques will not degrade its value.) Even if corrosion is not visible, protect the iron with a mantle of sea varnish. 3 out of 10 Leaf Chair Vintage American forage iron is now very much wanted, says Joni Lima, a drug dealer and co-owner of the Iron Renaissance in Damariscotta, Maine. At a flea market or garden antiques show, expect to pay about $100 for an unspitful side chair and between $1,000 and $3,500 for an entire dining set. This may sound steep for outdoor furniture, but with the raw material now so expensive, a new foreay iron table or chair can cost three times as much as a vintage piece. Pictured: Grapes and olive leaves from Grace Salterini's French landscape pattern (early 40s; $3,500 for a table and six chairs). 4 of 10 Wire Mesh Chair TIPS: Lima says: Look for nicely rounded wire ends and disturbed tables that don't shake, as well as significant curved legs that won't sink into the grass. Barbara Israel, dealer and author of antiquity garden ornament (Abrams), suggests this simple technique: Try the anti-furniture magnet. If it sticks, it's probably a shinged iron, not aluminum. Pictured: Furniture designers designed and welded this fine hand-held mesh wire on the Lee Woodard Sons handheld frame (1950; $400). 5 of the 10 Sets of chairs and tables Unfinished wire ends mark a cheaply made – but still robust – furniture set (1950s; $250 for a chair and table). 6 of Leinfelder's 10 Gracifol Arms design has an elegant, artificially curved ironworks ($30,000; $3,000 for a six-chair dining set). 7 of 10 Lily-Pad Table The refurbished salterini lily-pad table was originally sold as part of a set of nesting tables (1930-1940; $175). 8 of the 10 grapevine grape grapes Garnish salterini's table (early 1940s; $3,500 for a dining set). 9 out of 10 knit meshwork chair this chair with meshwork connects to an umbrella table (1950s; $3,500). 10 of Leinfelder's 10 lattice-back chair latticework, made in Wisconsin, evokes bridge cables (1930s; $2,900 for a dining set with six chairs). Gardeners Hmmm... Wie die duften! Tali Roth Newsflash: Houseplants definitely have a moment. Of course, those of us blessed with green dwarfs (lucky!) have always loved a potted plant or two, but these days you would be hard pressed to enter the elegant interior and not notice fig fig figs made of figs, sacy something or other such greens that mix us with black sticks to learn how to keep plants alive. With this green wave, fruit and plant stand-ups were re-created in a wide variety of styles. Your default brown ceramic planter will no longer be alone. In addition, come fall, you will want to surround yourself with plants that are scientifically proven mood amplifiers. And let's not forget that they literally clean the air. Ready to give your space to treat greenhouse gases? Don't look any further than the best plants standing on the market and give your greenery the headlights it deserves.
