Together, they have collected more than 50,000 five-star ratings, and Wikipedia is the current king of the encyclopedia world. Encyclopaedia Britannica, I remember announcing the end of print publication a few weeks ago. Now Wikipedia and their parents Wikimedia Foundation-want to conquer the final frontier: Academia. If Wikipedia is Jimmy Wales and the acolyte in their own way, professors can edit Wikipedia pages in their field, add content in foreign languages, and allow students to quote Wikipedia articles in et papers. The Wikipedia Education Programme is an ambitious worldwide project aimed at using Wikipedia as an educational tool Worldwide. Worldwide. there is also an easy way for Wikipedia to boost foreign language content in critical markets like Brazil and the Arab world, and an open encyclopedia to transform itself into a bona fide research engine for academia. The move also comes as the Atlantic's Alexis Madrigal noticed, while Google quietly ousted Google Scientist, seemingly to focus on higher-revenue services. For the non-profit Wikipedia, storming and adopting the barricades of acadity is a very desirable goal. Wikimedia's LiAnna Davis tells Fast Company that Wikipedia's Education Program is one of the projects that improves the quality of content, and the Wikipedia Ambassadors Program recruits ambassadors in person and online to serve as Wikipedia evangelists within the academy. Ambassadors are experienced Wikipedia editors who are expected to train professors and academics on Wikipedia article etiquette, format, tagging, and community etiquette. The Wikipedia Education Program is funded from Wikimedia's annual operating budget. The university project began in the 2010-11 academic year as part of the Public Policy Initiative, which had a budget of $1.2 million from the Stanton Foundation. The Public Policy Initiative was a scaled-down version of the project, which aims to recruit professors of social sciences to entrust their students with improving articles on relevant topics on Wikipedia. The current budget of the Wikipedia Education Program is unknown. Ambassadors are experienced Wikipedia editors who are expected to train professors and academics on Wikipedia article etiquette, format, tagging, and community etiquette. A significant part of Wikipedia's Education Program consists of students editing Wikipedia pages related to their field of study. According to Davis, professors have found that students are energized by contributing to a website that they use on a daily basis. Professors who participate in the program will receive sample lesson plans and curricula to use in the classroom, and ambassadors are expected to help professors building their own. The example, made publicly available by the Wikimedia Foundation, builds a 12-week college course around Wikipedia, where lessons cover everything from building articles to linking to resources and avoiding plagiarism. The reminders provided by Wikimedia deal with topics such as basic Wikicode and uploading images. Academics are also encouraged to serve as informal curators in their fields of expertise. Wikimedia encourages professors to edit pages in their field of study and to create new articles on niche topics. Wales and the company have also aggressively sought out scientific organisations for professional cooperation. A 000-member Psychological Science Association (APS) has launched a Wikipedia wikipedia where students provide psychological academic entries accurate and complete. Another major organization, the 14,000-member American Sociological Association (ASA), has its own Wikipedia initiative dedicated to ensuring that sociological-related articles are accurate, up-to-date, complete, and written in a style appropriate for the general public, and to fix problems found in existing articles. Wikipedia's growing role played an important role in the legitimacy of the site. While Wikipedia has been hugely popular for years, articles on the site (which is of course edited by the general public) have been dogged by allegations of errors and bias. This reporter easily remembers being emphatically told back in the early 2000s that college professors never use Wikipedia quotes. However, it is rare to find an academic who is not at least occasionally a Wikipedia user. More common are the cases of academics like the Univerisity of Massachusetts-Amherst's Edward Erikson, who said that Wikipedia is always present in the classroom, whether they are invited to attend or not. But while the Wikipedia Education Program gives Wikipedia considerable prestige for academy-approved status, the real secret sauce is the international market. In non-English countries, Wikipedia has very different usage rates. Although there are just over 3.9 million English-language articles on Wikipedia, there are only ~1,235,000 French articles and 185,000 Bahasa Indonesian articles. Some languages are disproportionately strong: 123,000 Basque articles (about 685,000 speakers), 126,000 Kazakh articles (about 13 million speakers) and 149,000 Lithuanian articles for 3.2 million speakers. Wikipedia boosts content in two critical markets, Brazil and the Arabic-language world-drawing scholars. In response to the Arabic language content on Wikipedia growing in what the foundation describes as a moderate rate, Wikimedia has recruited professors and students from Egypt's Ain Shams University and Cairo University to develop Arabic-language content for Wikipedia. There are just over 170,000 Arabic-language articles on Wikipedia, despite the fact that there are more than 400 million Arab speakers worldwide. Wikipedia has a stronger Portuguese presence; there are about 720,000 items online for a target audience of 252 million in Brazil, Portugal, and elsewhere. However, Brazil's staggering economic growth and internet penetration rates make it an attractive expansion site for wikipedia. Wikipedia is not as ubiquitous in Brazil as in the Anglo-Saxon world, and printed encyclopedias still dominate much of the market. Similar projects have been launched at other universities around the world. To name a few, there is an official Wikipedia presence in the universities of the Czech Republic Macedonia, Mexico and Russia. Many programs at the Autonomous National University of Mexico and the Monterrey Institute of Technology and Higher Education allow students to translate Wikipedia articles from English to Spanish and edit existing articles into academic credits. Perhaps more than anything, the Wikipedia Education Program seems to indicate Wikimedia is becoming more ambitious and in need of decency. Constant allegations of misbehaviour, bias, and other sloppy residue crowdsourcing dogged the encyclopedia for a long time. It's no surprise that, whether you like your professor or not, many university students (damn it, maybe most of us) turn to Wikipedia to look for scientific work. For Wikimedia, it's easy to ally the academy and work with the academy. If this project helps them break into key foreign language markets where they face competition, so be it.
