By Stephanie Breaux in Microsoft Network or MSN, a wide range of current topics and new stories appear on the home page. These topics range from sports, weather and top entertainment stories. To customize your experience on your website, Microsoft has added a variety of customization tools. One of these tools is the ability of the user to change the background color of the MSN home page. If you want to change the default white background of your home page to a different color, such as blue, you'll be able to do so by adjusting your personal settings. Visit the main page of the MSN website, Sign in to your account. Click the Customize your page link. Select a color under the Change Color heading. You will be able to choose from different colors. Click Save & Close. These are just screenshots; you can see the full-size PDF in the link below each image. Pages vary in subject matter and level of detail, but museums have made sure the images are child-friendly. (There is some medieval violence and religious scene if it's something you want to screen before sending your kids to the site.) Some books are just a few pages, others longer, and some contain thumbnails of full-color originals. They all name image sources, and they all use public domain images that are legal for reuse.
