North Carolina State University, located in the heart of downtown Raleigh, is North Carolina's largest public university. It was founded in 1887 with the goal of making a higher education available to a larger number of students, especially the children of farmers and mechanics. Today, this research university maintains its strong agricultural program and puts an important focus on technology, teaching and veterinary medicine, among other subjects, as it works to prepare students for a career after graduation. NC State is a selective university with an acceptance rate of 43.9% for its 2019 first-class class. Notably, it is ranked among the top 10 public universities in the United States for best value and ranked #1 ROI from North Carolina Public Universities. In addition to the Joint App or Coalition Application essay, North Carolina State University requires aspiring undergraduate freshmen to write two complementary essays of about 250 words each. Honors and Scholars applicants must write an additional essay of 500 words. CollegeVine is here to provide detailed tips and examples to help you approach NC State supplemental essays. Want to know your chances at NC State? Calculate your chances for free right now. Want to learn what NC State will actually cost you based on your income? And how long your application to school should take? Here's what every student considering NC State needs to know. NC State Complementary Essay Prompts Prompt 1: Discuss Your Reasons for Running the Major/Academic Programs Selected Above? (250 words) Prompt 2: NC State University is committed to building a just and inclusive community, one that does not tolerate unfair or inhumane treatment, and who condemns it, clearly and loudly. Describe what these words mean to you and how you will contribute to a more diverse and inclusive NC State environment. (250 words) University Honors Program Applicants One of the most important components of the University's Honors Program is a set of special courses called HON seminars. You can learn more about them here. These discussion-based seminars are designed to expose students to how multiple disciplines approach and solve problems. Discuss why you think courses like these are an important part of an undergraduate experience and how they would improve your development and challenge your intellectual curiosity. (500 words) University Scholars Program Applicant Part of the mission of the University Scholars Program is to offer students unique academic and enriching programs that challenge them to be culturally connected, informed and engaged citizens. What does this mean to you and how does it connect to what you hope to be and who you hope to be? (500 words) This is the classic Why this major? Essay. Reading this call, it would be easy to fall into a trap to simply list that you have that relates to your intended larger. For example, if you want bigger in technology, you would list that you attended NCSU Olympiad and other STEM activities. But avoid the urge to do this. While you should certainly mention if there is a certain extracurricular that drove you to love this area, don't just list the things that you've done in the context of this great or program. Instead, you want to support your decision with content that NCSU admissions staff have not yet seen on your application. For example, you can tell a story about a moment during the Science Olympiad when you come across a project with applications outside the club. Maybe you discovered a robotic device to help others and from that moment on, you realized that this was an area where you could make an impact. When do you decide to pursue this great/program? Why? Think back to the things that first got you interested in the program you intend to pursue. For example, if mathematics has been a passion of yours for a long time, then you can make a joke if your first memory is making a math problem. Or maybe you always considered yourself a math person until you challenged yourself in a humanities class and discovered your passion for the subject. What are the broader applications of this program? Another factor that admissions officers will look for is your ability to demonstrate how a graduate of their school in this great would help you achieve your goals and make the world a better place. Try to quote your career goals and how your major will help you achieve them. The admissions people want to see your passion; they don't want to accept someone who is pre-med just because it is financially lucrative or because their parents want them to become doctors. How does your great contact with some of your other interests? Admissions officers appreciate students who realize that their major has connections and relationships with other subjects and activities. Referencing both shows that you are interdisciplinary and can highlight your personality by helping to showcase interests other than your major. Be careful not to get carried away talking only about extracurricular activities, however; make sure it relates back to your major. An example of this: Philosophy, much like jazz music I play on my piano, is all up to interpretation and how you see things. You can give any pianist the same chord and never get the same song. Similarly, after proposing a question to a group of philosophers, you will receive countless and innovative answers. Why this great/ program at NCSU and not another school? The most important thing for this part of your answer is to do research! If you incorporate NCSU into your essay, then you should avoid hackneyed statements like: NCSU will help me pursue my dreams of becoming a civil engineer because they have a really good engineering program. The state puts a great focus on research and will appreciate someone who is ready to positively contribute to their community and is genuinely interested in the subject. For research, you can look at the work that professors in your great do. You can also look at some of the clubs on campus and what types of projects they are working on or events they hold — admissions officers want to be able to imagine as an NC State student contributing to the community, so tell them what specific resources you would benefit from on campus. For example, the engineering student interested in building safer bridges can write about how they want to join the NC State chapter of the American Concrete Institute to make concrete models of hybrid sliding rocking columns. One of the wonderful things about college is that it's a time to explore your interests and try new things! With this in mind, if you're not sure of your potential larger, then give examples of things that you want to try at NC State. You can discuss how you might want to be an engineer but have worked with young children as a camp counselor and would like to try teaching. For this, the same rules apply as above; don't list, but rather be specific and tell a story about your background or how you would fit in at NCSU as you try new things and gain value from an interdisciplinary education! Here are more tips on how to write Why this Major essay if you are unsure. An example of what not to do: I have a passion for learning about different cultures. I have studied French for six years and participated in an exchange trip after my first year for two weeks, so that I can live with a family in Oyonnax, France. This experience, together with continued political discussions in the midst of the French and American elections, has inspired me interest in global issues. I love communication, diplomacy and politics. I want to go into international public service with a focus on human rights and be a voice for those who lack one. One of the main reasons for this why global issues? essay is not as strong due to its listiness quality. Many of the items included in this paper are ones that the admissions office will already have read from the activity list on the joint application; so, including those this waste space that could be used to say something new. How can it be improved? Telling a story and showing why you want to study this great is a great place to start. Focus on what was mentioned in the last sentence: be [ing] a voice for those who lack one. Have you had experience with this? Why is this important? Why have you enjoyed it before? The focus could also be on the part about the French and American elections: What was interesting about these discussions? How was the choice similar and different? Provide specific to strengthen your response. Here's an example: Macron a gagné,My host mom said with a relieved sigh. It was 2017, and I studied abroad as a hometasta student in Oyonnax, France. The murmur of BFM TV was subdued as I chimed in with my own thoughts — I had just experienced my first French choice, and it was a fascinating experience! Since that day, I have been interested in the differences between French and American elections, and above all democratic transitions of power. Elections to me are a universal human right — the peaceful transition of the torch of Lady Liberty, the keys to the kingdom, is a historical marvel. I want to keep democracy alive; by combining what I learned in Oyonnax and in Durham as an opinion poll worker on political accountability, I strive to start an election monitoring NGO specializing in my mother's native Mali. Majoring in political science at NC State, with its unique Honors Program and faculty advisors engaged in comparative choice research, is the best stepping stone I could take to make my goal a reality... To start this essay, think about the concepts they want you to define: a just and inclusive community, condemning inhumane treatment. Explain what they mean to you with a story, and connect the two concepts — to have a just and inclusive community, we must condemn inhumane treatment. You could start the essay with first lines similar to the following: The rain poured on us, the wind was gushing. I could barely keep my wet eyes open, but I could still see the beauty of the moment. Thousands of people of all colors and walks of life marched together to support Black Lives Matter. The Raleigh Convention Center faded behind us as we moved closer to the state capital — closer to progress. It was that day when I really learned what a just and inclusive community looks like. A just and inclusive community is one in which a person's struggle and oppression, no matter how different they are from our own, is treated as everyone's struggle and oppression. This community does not come into being, but is created by condemning inhumane treatment. The arc of the universe bends to justice, but not without help. I strive to bend the arc of nc state's community towards participation through ... The next step is to explain how you will contribute to diversity. Here are some tips for if you decide to discuss, at least in part, how you can contribute to the various student populas at NC State: Choose an overall idea you want to come across. Doing this allows you to focus on something that admissions officers have not yet seen in your application, as well as allow you to provide supportive examples. This is also beneficial because who you are consists of more than just an experience; therefore, by choosing a theme, you can show things in your life that have helped you who you are. For example, you can focus on how in whatever you do, you work to help and be a voice for others. From that, you choose two experiences that would support this ability to empathize with others: your work with a child with autism and is one of the founders of a reading program at the SPCA. Questions to consider when deciding what makes you unlike others. Use these questions as a basis to figure out what makes you unique. You can use one as your overall idea or simply tell a story based off of one of these questions about something important in your life. Also note that you do not have to say, I'm different because ... Your essay will be stronger if you focus on telling a story about what kind of person you are: How did the place you grew up in affect your identity? Does your family emphasize the importance of religion or culture? Did you grow up in an area with a lot of diversity? What are some of the things that get you fired up? What are you passionate about? Is there anything you can bring to NCSU that they don't already have? (Example: You are a master at solving Rubik's cubes and would love to have this quality share with others at NC State.) Taking advantage of diversity admissions officers will gather a lot on how you can contribute to diversity at NCSU. They also want to know how you will benefit from being around so many unique people. Note: It's okay to mention both what you will be bringing and how you will benefit but, since there is a limited amount of words for this essay, you can also focus on one. Have you ever lived in a versatile area before? If not, is there anything that you think can be gained from diversity?

Be specific! Avoid saying that you just want to learn new things from new people, but rather explain why this can be helpful to your education or growth as a person. For example, you can talk about how being around students coming from different cultures will help you realize how different people and beliefs intertwine. You can talk about how you are interested in learning about Middle Eastern studies but have never met anyone from the Middle East. If you have, what did you get from the interaction? What else would you gain at NC State? Talk about some of the benefits of diversity and how you expect, or don't expect, something similar at NC State. How would diversity help you understand the world around you or help prepare you for a job in the future? NCSU prioritizes high priority on preparing for a career after graduation. For example: You can talk about how with globalization, the world is getting smaller. It is now more important than ever to learn about other cultures. You can also mention how, along with this, you want to study abroad and experience even more diversity all over the world. University Honors Program Provides Transformative Learning that allows students to critically engage meaningful problems in the world. Students in the University Honors Program are capable and motivated students who embrace interdisciplinary courses and participate in disciplinary based research, scholarship and creative activities. The goal of hon seminars is to give honors students an interdisciplinary education based on research and discussion. You will want to start the essay by telling the story of the moment when you realized why such an education is important to the world we live in today. For example, the introduction may be: We didn't win the bottle rocket competition in AP Physics by accident. It was something our team had that resulted in the creation of the Velox rocket, a four-foot, multi-chamber missile made of Sprite bottles. Our team had José, who laid the blueprints for our rocket with attention to detail. Muhammadu kept the team united and focused with his conductivity, while Alexis crunched the numbers to optimize our aerodynamics. I added a Space X-style varnish to the body and fins and wrote our project report. I think our rocket hovered in the sky on launch day not because each of us was a genius, but because we combined our different perspectives and skills with open communication and a passion for research. When our rocket landed on a nearby house, I saw the power of interdisciplinary teamwork. Interdisciplinary teamwork produces not only bottle rockets, but real rockets. It is crucial for the undergraduate experience today because... To explain how HON seminars are important to you specifically, think about your goals. What skills and personal values do you want to develop under grad, and what are you intellectually curious about? Look into the details of hon seminars and choose a specific seminar that would help you go beyond your general training and reach your unique goals. You can start this part of the essay with an interconnecting phrase that interdisciplinary teamwork would be crucial to my own undergraduate experience. Explain how your skills and personal values could benefit from an interdisciplinary environment and learning by doing. For example, if you wanted to develop your leadership skills under grad, you could talk about how a HON seminar would allow you to intellectually lead through discussion-based classes and research conducted with a Socratic philosophy. Mention a topic that you would be excited to explore in your chosen HON seminar. Highlight why you have intellectual curiosity about this topic, and what questions you have about it. Show your passion here by probing deeply. If you are interested in astrophysics, talk about how you want your idea of starting an asteroid mining business to be intellectually challenged during the Science, American Style HON seminar. Finish by tying your own own curiosity back to the NC State community. Explain how you are ready to meet others who love to ask questions, enjoy working with people who have completely different backgrounds and perspectives, and value mind-on learning. A good start to this essay would be to show, rather than tell, what being a culturally connected, informed and committed citizen means to you. The only thing you don't want to do with this essay is to define the terms in the format of a list, such as the name of the document. Instead, describe moments in your life when you lived out these citizenship values firsthand. An example might be about being a campaign planning volunteer at the International Festival in Raleigh. Here you would paint a picture of cultural affinity with words, like this: And so where the festival is approaching its. As I looked at country flags on the roof of the Raleigh Convention Center, I saw a human history in each one. The flag of Belarus took me back to the first time I tried to bli ni on the food stand, and Timor Leste's flag reminded me to ask Cidália how the tais canvas in her booth was made. Reflecting on these experiences, I felt culturally connected—I was able to attach cultures not to academic ideas or stereotypes, but to complex and authentic human stories. Continue this model to explain what being an informed and committed citizen means. To define informed, ask yourself which subjects should be considered the most important for students to learn during their K-12 training before entering the real world. To define engaged, ask yourself what activities are necessary to keep the community functioning or make it work better. Next, join the picture with a few sentences like the following: I strive to be a committed citizen by working to solve my community's lack of rare earth minerals – now by taking apart old phones, and in the future by breaking asteroids. Most of all, I strive to live life as a leader who gives everyone a seat at the table. Then explain why you have these goals. Avoid doing this part a Why this Major essay, and focus your attention on linking your choices to being a culturally connected, informed and committed citizen. While writing this part, take a look at the University Scholars Program (USP) website. Drag a recent news article, engagement activity, or Scholars Forum topic from the site that interests you and agrees to your goals. Weave this into your explanation of what and who you want to be. Finish with the message that you hope to emulate the committed citizenship displayed by the USP activity or exam you choose as a hopeful USP exam yourself. Here's an example: I know the University Scholars Program is the right program for me because Scholars Forum speakers look at the as I do. I'm glad to see that Christina Hammock was a USP alumnus and that the program helped launch her success at NASA. She undoubtedly benefited from the USP's encouragement of bold intellectual curiosity through her interdisciplinary, research-based education. Only NC State's electrical engineering and physics program could give Christina opportunities for research science instrument development, they could advise me hands-on opportunities to build a prototype asteroid excavator. I hope to be a committed citizen by creating the most environmentally friendly solution possible to the rare earth mineral deficiency, and most of all, an accomplished USP physics and electrical engineering degree like Christina.
