In 1997, when Amazon first applied for its initial public offering, the company was only three years old and had no clear path to profitability. It faced a growing list of competitors, including Simon & Schuster and Barnes & Noble, each of whom had already sold books online. (more information) Amazon IPO'd on May 15, 1997, trading on the NASDAQ under the symbol AMZN at a price of $18 per share. On the day the IPO's share price rose and closed at $23.50 putting the company worth $560 million. With a split-adjusted close of $1.96, the share price has multiplied nearly 500 times since then. As regards the history of the distribution of Amazon's shares, the first share split occurred on 2 December 2004. This was a 2-1 split. Amazon's next share split was a 3-1 split on January 5, 1999. There has been one more stock split for Amazon shares this year, as 2-1 shares split on September 2. Although Amazon is a juggling of stocks now. It has a pretty turbulent history. Amazon shares first broke $100 dollars in 1999, but after the tech bubble burst the share price fell short of triple figures again until 10 years later. The stock suffered a 94% drop after a $106.69 high in December 1999, crashing to a low of $5.97 in January 2001. Despite recovering over the next few years and getting back on the share price of more than $50 the stock crashed back to $26.07 in 2006. Despite the positive growth, Amazon shares had another blip during the 2008 crash, losing 60% year on year. In 2016, the share price again experienced some significant declines during the year due to disappointing profit results. But every time Amazon bounced back, hitting all-time highs and continuing on its seemingly unstoppable rise. On the 20th anniversary of the IPO, Amazon shares closed at $961.35, giving the company a market value of about $466.2 billion. That's 490 times its split share price. Few investors could have assumed it would have gained about 50,000% in the two decades following its initial public offering. A thousand dollars invested at the closing price on Amazon's IPO day would cost more than half a million dollars 20 years later. Of course one investor who has been there throughout amazon's stock history is Jeff Bezos. Put him on the path of becoming the richest man in the world. Bezos sold a total of $1.4 billion of Amazon shares in 2016. Yet in 2017, as Amazon's shares soared in the past year, Amazon's CEO sold about $941 million of Amazon shares in three days as part of a planned sale. This kind of comeback has eluded many analysts and even investors as seasoned as Warren Buffett, the Berkshire Hathaway CEO, who recently said he was too stupid to realize what was going to happen. 2020/12/28. The content delivery network provider (CDN) was already on a surge thanks to explosive growth in the video streaming market, and then two massive events poured more fuel on Fastly's fire. Most applicants use CDN services from Fastly and others in order to provide a smooth video experience without a tedious cache. Amazon Prime Day events and promotions from peers began holiday sales in mid-October. Online sales rose sharply, but department stores and clothing firms continued to suffer from pandemics. International Business Machines (IBM) and Airbnb recently settled a patent infringement lawsuit filed in March 2020.
