At work, he was characterized as a very jolly and good-natured guy. From to , in the Russian city of Angarsk over 20 beastly murders of young women occurred. All but one of the victims were drunk when they were killed. They were knocked off with screwdrivers, knives, bats, hammers, and so on. They were also raped before being murdered all but the one who was sober and posthumously mutilated. The crimes were left unsolved until , when repeated genetic tests showed Popkov, who was earlier brought to the investigation, to be the murderer.

Popkov was soon apprehended and surrendered to the police. Popkov said that early in their relationship his wife cheated on him. Popkov then proceeded to kill the women who said yes to him. Eventually, he confessed to more than 80 murders and said he stopped killing because of impotence he gained with a venereal disease. In January this year investigators announced they had been able to extract confessions to 59 more murders. They now appeared to have secured one further confession, and have reportedly charged Popkov with 60 murders. In world history, there would be very few people who have personally killed more victims. Based on maps of burial sites he drew in prison, his total number of known victims could eventually rise to exceed In January, however, they had raised the possibility of there being more victims to be discovered, outside of the Irkutsk region where Popkov killed all his known victims. Police investigated the possibility that he might have killed somewhere along the way to Vladivostock, but in January reported they had yet to find any evidence of Popkov having murdered outside the Irkutsk region.

There has also been speculation that Popkov is rationing his confessions, in a ploy to delay the moment when he has to go from his current detention prison to a tough penal colony to serve out the rest of his life sentence. As for the wife Elena, 51, and daughter Ekaterina, 30, to whom he was supposedly a good husband and father, they initially refused to believe he was a serial killer. Based on the true story of a Russian serial killer who, over many years, claimed over 50 victims, mostly under the age of In what was then a Communist state, the police investigations were hampered by bureaucracy, incompetence and those in power. The story is told from the viewpoint of the detective in charge of the case. You don't want to know what he does You just want to know when he's caught.

Biography Crime Drama History Thriller. Rated R for strong, graphic violence and related language. Did you know Edit. Trivia The characters of Fetisov and Burakov were both real people who investigated the actual Chikatilo killings, yet their ranks and positions were changed in the movie. Historically, Major Mikhail Fetisov was sent from Moscow in order to investigate the killings in the film he is already in Rostov as a Colonel heading the militia while Victor Burakov was a civilian forensic expert in the film he is a Police Lieutenant assigned by Fetisov to head the investigation.

There was no Central Committee comprised of Communist Party and KGB men above the two this was a plot device created for the film to show Soviet bureaucratic methods and the main reason why the case took so long was that the investigators interviewed over , people trying to narrow down who the killer could be. The mistaken release of Chikatilo, and the botched blood-semen test, was accurate as it occurred in the investigation.

Goofs The film spans 12 years, yet Lt. Viktor Burakov's children don't age. Quotes Bukhanovsky : It is embarrassing to see grown men run from their responsibilities. Crazy credits Epilogue: "The mistake in blood and semen analysis that allowed Andrei Chikatilo to be released in has never been adequately explained.

Soviet Russia's head forensics expert has since asserted that she had discovered a rare new phenomenon--a man with a blood type of one kind, and a semen type of another. Her colleagues around the world scoff at the idea. Chikatilo led detectives to the graves of three undiscovered victims, proving conclusively that he was their murderer, and bringing the final body count to 52 dead. Thirty-five of the victims were children under the age of Andrei Chikatilo was convicted of all 52 murders. User reviews Review.

Top review. This movie tells an amazing story with history and compassion. From the careful descriptions of the crime scenes to the mental health of the lead investigator, you'll be entranced. It's an absolute must-see for anyone interested in criminology. Interpol relations and how the agencies work together are also great. Not overly done either. I recommend it for anyone interested in Russian history, too. The very words 'serial killer' are enough to strike fear into the heart of any normal person. While many of us are fascinated by this criminal breed and cannot resist the morbid need to learn more about them, we are also repulsed by the various atrocities and horrific acts that they are able to bring themselves to commit.

Amongst the best known serial killers, not just in Russia but in the world, is the insanely evil Andrei Chikatilo, aka the Rostov Ripper. However, there were many other serial murderers in Russia that came before him and many that came after him — some were even inspired read more. Book Specifications. ISBN Language English. Citizen X (TV Movie) - IMDb

He had some type of head injury around the age of 4 and spent time in an institute for the disabled as a child. He appeared to be in competition with one of Russia's most well-known serial killers, Andrei Chikatilo, who was convicted of 52 murders in Around the time of Chikatilo's trial in , Pichushkin committed his first murder. He was just a teenager when he pushed a boy out of a window, according to Pichushkin's televised confession. While the police did question him in the case, it was later declared a suicide.

Pichushkin's murderous impulses lay dormant for years until he began killing people in Moscow's Bittsevsky Park in the early s. Often targeting the elderly or the destitute, he lured his victims to the park to reportedly drink with him at his dead dog's grave. There appears to be some kernel of truth to this story. After the loss of his grandfather, with whom he shared a close bond, Pichushkin became depressed. He got a dog that he often walked in the park. It is unknown whether the dog is actually buried there, however. Pichushkin waited until his intended victim was intoxicated and then he hit him or her repeatedly with a blunt instrument — a hammer or a piece of pipe. To conceal the bodies, he often threw his victims into a sewer pit. Some of them were still alive at the time and ended up drowning. As the killings progressed, Pichushkin's attacks grew even more savage.

He left a broken vodka bottle sticking out of some victims' skulls and seemed to care less about disposing of the bodies, just leaving them out in the open to be discovered. By , Moscow residents — especially those that lived near the park — feared that there was a serial killer on the loose. Authorities finally caught up with Pichushkin in June after he killed a woman he worked with at a supermarket. She had left a note for her son to tell him that she was taking a walk with Pichushkin. While he was aware of the risks involved in killing his co-worker, he still murdered her. After his arrest, the police discovered a chessboard with dates on 61 or 62 of its 64 squares.

Pichushkin was a fan of the game and had been trying to kill as many people as there were squares on the board. Despite the date references, the police were only able to charge Pichushkin with 51 counts of murder and attempted murder three of his victims survived. Pichushkin's confession was aired on Russian television. The Independent.
