Description Horton and Cantelli are called to a nursing home where an elderly resident, suffering from dementia, claims she's been attacked by an intruder. Horton is ready to dismiss it as senile ramblings until he discovers that her room-mate has died, the dead woman's belongings are missing and her son, convicted for armed robbery, has been found dead in his cell. As if this isn't enough, Horton also has to deal with a series of threatening telephone calls to a television personality, and a mother's conviction that her son's death on Christmas Eve was no accident.

Soon, to his surprise, Horton finds he is caught up in a complex investigation that has far-reaching international implications. May 12, Rena George rated it it was amazing. Horton is sceptical that it's a publicity stunt Jackson and his co-presenter, Nick Farnsworth, have cooked up to promote a new series of their diving shows. Horton is far more interested in the possibly suspicious death of Irene Edbury, an elderly resident in city care home and the sudden death of her jailbird son, Peter, in prison only days later. More intrigue is stirred into the mix when attractive DC Harriet Lin is seconded to his team and Horton learns that she actually works for the Intelligence Directorate.

But who has she been sent to spy on? Someone high up must be interested in his investigation, and he intends to discover why. His love for his little daughter, Emma, is endearing, and I feel his frustration at the determination of his estranged wife, Catherine to keep them apart. A good read that I would recommend to all lovers of crime fiction. Not bad for a holiday read. Just a few too many characters to keep tabs on and it got a bit confusing. I was quite happy when a couple were bumped off Apr 25, Suzanne rated it it was amazing. I'm hooked now! I want to see the outcome of Horton's personal search as well as his work results I'm hooked now! I want to see the outcome of Horton's personal search as well as his work results Jul 19, Paschalis marked it as to-read Shelves: eLibrary. Jun 02, Beth rated it really liked it. Horton and Cantelli are called to investigate threats made to one of the presenters on Wrecks Around Britain, a program which seems destined to never run out of material.

Perry Jackson and Nicholas Farnsworth have a respectable number of viewers for their program although Horton has never watched it. They are then called to a nursing home which specializes in treating patients with dementia. One woman claims that she was attacked by an intruder. That is too much coincidence to be accepted as anything but real and Horton has another reason to want to know what happened to Irene Ebury. When Daniel Collins is found dead after he drives his car off the wharf and into Portsmouth Harbor, his parents refuse to accept that he was drunk. Daniel was not a drinker yet there was enough alcohol in his system to suggest that he was impaired on Christmas Eve. To further complicate his life, Horton has been handed the work of a detective chief inspector without the promotion or the pay increase.

He has, however, been given Detective Constable Harriet Lee to help with his new case load. Horton does not doubt for an instant that she is a spy for the upper levels of the department. Question is why does someone think he needs a watcher? Despite all the various strands that Horton has to hold, the stories hold together well and Horton and Cantelli are interesting characters to meet. Although it is the fourth book in the series, it is the first that I have read. I intend to remedy that. Sep 03, Deb rated it liked it. A nursing home with employees conducting illegal activities; three men killed that were all involved in deep-sea diving and treasure hunting; Horton still having problems getting visitation rights with his daughter; Hortons long time partner on the police force goes missing. All of these occurrences are connected and resolved! Jun 04, Robert rated it liked it.

Entertaining read, and just enough character detail to keep you interested without overloading you with useless info. And once again, interesting to read something based in another country.
