Rent (7) Payment amount. The payment that the landlord expects from the tenant on each payment day should be defined as the dollar amount. (8) Frequency of payments.

Mark the frequency of the amount of equipment payable by selecting the most suitable item from the list. This may require or have to pay once a month, week or day after the tenant. If the landlord requires another payment period (i.e. every two weeks), the latter option should be selected as this will allow such a definition to be registered free of charge. V. Rental Instructions (9) Approved Payment Method. This contract must include how the landlord wishes to be paid. Rental equipment can usually be paid for by credit, money transfer, check, or even cash. This largely depends on the owner of the object and his clients (tenants), but it must be formalized before signing this documentation so that it can be applied to the prepared contract. You. Late (10) fine for late payment. Many landlords will try to impose a fine if the tenant does not pay the equipment rental amount on time. In this case, the number of days after the non-payment period should be set as the deadline that the tenant expects. The fine should be credited to the tenant's account on the last day of the deferment period on the first day. Also, the list must indicate the exact amount of the fine. After submitting this declaration, it will confirm that a certain number of days from the date of payment will be included in the tenant's account. (11) for late payment to a fine.
